Could we have a clarification on the numbers? My understanding is as the numbers change it should be announced by one of the opposition parties. That was the agreement earlier.

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Environment and Energy): As I put forward that particular agreement with everyone, the agreement was that each party, as their membership would change, would designate or indicate the number of members that there were in their seats that would be deemed standing at the critical time. Therefore, at this point in time, the NDP would indicate that they had one member and the Liberals that they had four.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm pleased to announce that we have four Liberals in the House right now.

Mr Marchese: I'm not sure. The member for London Centre indicated who was coming, but the member for Beaches-Woodbine is here, making a call but not here present. There are two of us, however.

The Acting Chair: The point is on the arrangement that every time the number changes in the House you stand and announce it.

Mr Marchese: We need to indicate that? There's one here at the moment.

The Acting Chair: I wasn't here at the time that decision was made and I was flying just a little bit by the seat of my pants, so to speak, to keep track of it, but my understanding, as long as we had the five here, but it does need to be announced as the changes occur. Then they'll be deemed standing so that'll make it a little more comfortable for you.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Fort William): There's no need for us to, for example, tell you that we now have five Liberals in the House because you already had five designated members for voting at that point. Is that right? You don't need to know a total count.

The Acting Chair: My understanding is, as it changes, it's to be announced.

Mrs McLeod: As it changes, for voting purposes?

The Acting Chair: Yes.

Mrs McLeod: Right. As opposed to just — you don't want a total number. We seem to have such enthusiasm that we have a great number of Liberals coming in this morning.

The Acting Chair: I'd like a clarification on what the arrangement was.

Hon Mr Sterling: The agreement was that members could stand in their place two different ways. If the party wanted to remain seated and be deemed to be standing, then the agreement was that some person from that party would indicate the number that were to be deemed standing, and that those people had to remain in their seats at the critical time.

Mr Phillips: We'd be happy to then. I gather the intent is that if there are five members, we would announce that; if there are four, we would announce that. And we certainly will ensure we do that.

The Acting Chair: As you go below the — yes, okay.

Mr Marchese: So is the point that as soon as our member comes, we indicate that we have two members at that time?

The Acting Chair: Right.

Mr Marchese: Each time there's a change, we indicate that change.

The Acting Chair: Up to the five. Is everybody more or less clear on that?

The Acting Chair: Order, please.

Clauses 25(1)(b) and (c):

"I move that section 25(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the clauses (b) and (c)."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, please say "aye." All those opposed, please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. This shall be a deferred vote.

We have a government motion, clause 25(1)(c):

"I move that clause 25(1)(c) of the bill be amended by striking out 'board of trustees,' and substituting 'financial advisory board.'"

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, please say "aye." All those opposed, please say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it. This shall be a deferred vote.

I have a Liberal motion, section 26:

"The Liberal members of the committee recommend that the committee vote against section 26."

This motion is out of order.

A Liberal motion, section 26:

"I move that section 26 of the bill be struck out."

That motion is out of order.

Shall section 26 carry? All those in favour, please say "aye." All those opposed, please say "nay." I believe the ayes have it. This shall be a deferred vote.

Liberal motion, section 29:

"I move that section 29 of the bill be amended by striking out:

"December 31 —"

Hon Mr Sterling: Mr Chair, a point of order: I don't believe you asked a question on section 24, as to whether it would carry with the amendments —

The Acting Chair: No we didn't.

Hon Mr Sterling: — or is it —

The Acting Chair: Section 24 is deferred because of the amendments.

We have a Liberal motion, section 29:

"I move that section 29 of the bill be amended by striking out 'December 31, 1997' in the second line of clause (a) and the sixth line clause (b) and substituting in both cases 'December 31, 2000.'"

Shall the motion carry?

Hon Mr Sterling: Mr Chairman, I would like to submit to you that I believe that this particular motion is out of order. The amendments that have been put forward — there are some 800 of these amendments — are contradictory in themselves. I believe that each of the amendments puts forward a different date, and therefore, I would view the amendments as —

Mr Mike Colle (Oakwood): Point of order, Mr Chair: He's dealing with the wrong motion.

Hon Mr Sterling: I thought this was an NDP amendment. Isn't this an NDP amendment? I'm sorry, excuse me. I withdraw my remarks then.

The Acting Chair: Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, please say "aye." All those opposed, please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. This shall be a deferred vote.

We have an NDP motion, section 29.1:

"I move that part 1 of the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Non-application to other municipalities

"29.1 This act does not apply to any of the following municipalities: Adelaide."

Shall the motion carry?

Hon Mr Sterling: Mr Chairman, I'm rising on a point of order as it is my belief that the NDP amendment and those 860 which follow are out of order. This amendment specifies that the bill does not apply to a certain municipality. The first municipality was Adelaide. The amendments which follow are listed in alphabetical order: other municipalities in Ontario to which the bill does not apply.

Bill 103 deals with the municipalities of Metropolitan Toronto, city of Toronto, city of York, city of East York, city of Etobicoke, city of Scarborough and the city of North York. According to both Erskine May and Beauchesne an amendment to a bill is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill or of the clause under consideration. The motion specifying that the bill does not apply to another municipality is irrelevant to this bill.

The title of the bill is clear in its terms of the municipality that the bill addresses. That title is "An act to replace the seven existing municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto by incorporating a new municipality to be known as the city of Toronto." The amendment is also clearly beyond the scope of the bill. It couldn't be clearer that it is beyond the scope of this bill.

The areas impacted by the bill are clearly defined in section 1, the definitions section. Amendments tabled speak to municipalities that have nothing to do with this legislation. I will cite examples of the Chair's rulings which have upheld that amendments that are beyond the scope of the bill are not in order:

On January 7, 1988, in clause-by-clause consideration of Bill 79, the Legislative Assembly Act, the opposition tabled an amendment that proposed to change the existing mechanism for fixing members' salaries. The Chair ruled that the mechanism for fixing members' salaries was not contemplated in the bill itself as it was introduced. He said that it was beyond the scope of the existing bill.

On January 10, 1988, in clause-by-clause consideration of Bill 2, the Ontario Automobile Insurance Board, the opposition tabled an amendment seeking the establishment of a fund by the facility association. The Chair ruled that the bill under consideration did not deal with the facility association and therefore was out of order, as it was beyond the scope and purpose of the bill being considered.

On November 24, 1981, in clause-by-clause consideration of —

The Acting Chair: Could I have your attention, please. I was about to rule this out of order anyway, and the rest of the amendments that follow that are similar, so to save you from continuing with your speech — but it was an excellent one at that.

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr Chair, on a point of order: Given that you have signalled that you had a previous ruling, I have points that I wish to argue that would suggest that these motions are in order.

The Acting Chair: Are you going to challenge the Chair?

Ms Lankin: You've made your ruling, have you? You don't want to hear the arguments?

The Acting Chair: Yes, I have.

Ms Lankin: Fine then. I challenge the Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. Call the Speaker.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the Speaker.

The Acting Chair: Mr Speaker, I ruled on section 29.1 that the issue was outside of the bill itself, talking about jurisdictions that are outside of the bill. I ruled on this one and the following ones. That has been challenged by the member for Beaches-Woodbine.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Thank you very much. Member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Ms Lankin: I'm sorry to disturb you, Mr Speaker, but we appreciate your coming here. I know the government members aren't.

First of all, may I say to you that we're in a bit of a strange circumstance because the Chair actually provided a ruling in the middle of an objection by the Minister of Environment with respect to this section, indicating he was intending to rule it out of order anyway. I sort of understand with a new Chair how that might have happened, but he did not provide the assembly with any reasons, so I'm at this point appealing a decision of the Chair with no reasons having been stated. I can only — yes?

The Speaker: May I make the suggestion, then, that you make your submissions based on —

Ms Lankin: What I think the reasons are.

The Speaker: Basically. Thank you.

Ms Lankin: Your suggestion is that I make my submissions based on what I think might have been his reasons.

The Speaker: Why you believe it's in order.

Ms Lankin: I will in fact endeavour to do that.

May I also indicate that it has been quite clear from a fair amount of chat that there has been an expectation that the advice to the Speaker and the Speaker's opinion with respect to this has been that this section may be out of order. I might be fighting an uphill battle here but I'm going to give this a stab.

I believe that the ruling of the Chair with respect to the admissibility or whether or not this amendment is in order relates to parliamentary authority found in Beauchesne's that says, "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negated." In this case the last section obviously wouldn't apply so I think that the arguments will be made as to whether this section is relevant to the bill and whether it is within the scope of the bill. I will argue that it is both relevant and within the scope.

Our series of amendments specify exemptions or exceptions to the applicability of the act, set out that the act does not apply to, in the case of the amendment before us, the municipality of Adelaide. I would point out first of all to you that this is consistent with other exceptions which are found within this bill itself, and I'll start off with Bill 103.

Subsection 28(1) of Bill 103 reads, "Nothing in this act affects school boards." I would suggest to you that the act very clearly sets out in the beginning, in its intent and in its title, that it is with respect to municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto, incorporating a new municipality known as the city of Toronto. Any argument that is made that you do not need to exempt municipalities other than those clearly within the intent of the bill could be made with school boards as well. Yet we find within the bill a specific exemption that says, "Nothing in this act affects school boards."

Further in clause 28(2)(b) we see, notwithstanding that general exception that we just had school boards, which would be school boards in all of Ontario — we know that to be the case because clause 28(2)(b) says that it "does not affect the existence or functioning of,

"(i) the school boards of the municipalities referred to in paragraphs 1 to 7 of that subsection,

"(ii) the Metropolitan Toronto School Board,

"(iii) the Metropolitan Separate School Board, or

"(iv) the Metropolitan Toronto French-Language School Council."

You can see we have exceptions set out here broadly that no school board in the province of Ontario is affected by this act, and more specifically, those school boards within Metropolitan Toronto are not affected by this act. I would argue that if it is necessary and/or appropriate, and more to the point in order, to have exemptions stated within the act of school boards, which are clearly not municipalities, according to any argument that would say our amendment is out of order, not directly to the intent of the legislation, not necessary, then I would fail to see how an amendment that specifically argues that municipalities, which are clearly more in keeping with the intent of this legislation — how an exemption spelling out which municipalities are not affected could be ruled out of order.

Further, I want to point out that in clause 28(2)(a) it indicates, "Without limiting the generality of subsection (1)" — which says, "Nothing in this act affects school boards" — and goes on to say that "section 23" — of Bill 103 — "does not apply with respect to school boards." If you look to section 23 you'll find that this is in a section of the act dealing with regular elections. Section 23 itself sets out the following rules that will apply to the 1997 regular election, but within that section dealing with regular elections subsection 22(1) reads:

"The following persons, if in office on November 30, 1977, shall continue in office until the end of the transitional year:

"1. The members of the old councils.

"2. The members of the local boards of the old municipalities."

If you look to the definitions section of this legislation you will find definitions for "old councils" and "local boards." I only point this out because it is clearly set out in the definition of "local board" that it "means a public utility commission, transportation commission, public library board, board of park management, local board of health, police services board, planning board...." Clearly school boards are not included in that.

By virtue of these sections read together within the legislation, you see that school boards are not in fact at all included and yet section 28 provides a specific exemption that school boards within Metropolitan Toronto are not included, but more broadly school boards across the province, any school board is not included. I submit to you that this being in order should equally make an amendment which we've put forward which would suggest that the act does not apply to the municipality of Adelaide an amendment that is in order.

I want to suggest to you that there are a large number of acts which state specifically what they do not apply to, even if it would seem obvious to some upon the reading of the intent of the act. I will give you one other example. I've given you the one from Bill 103 itself. Another example: Section 3 of the Rent Control Act contains a long list of exemptions, even though section 2 of that act clearly says, "This act applies to rental units in residential complexes." Some of the exemptions, and there's a long list of them, include things like hospitals and jails. Although on the most obvious and commonsense reading I believe most reasonable people would not consider hospitals or jails to be "residential units in residential complexes," yet that exemption is there and that exemption has been ruled to be in order.

Lastly, I would submit to you that this bill itself, as is written and as we are currently dealing with and amending, deals with areas of the province that are under the governance of municipalities outside of Metropolitan Toronto. If you look to the schedule attached to the bill which lists a number of ridings which would be the basis of new wards that would be formed as the bill is written now, it includes York North which, as we know, is north of Metropolitan Toronto and outside of the jurisdiction which this bill purports to deal with.

On the argument that the bill itself has exemptions which would seem to be dealing with school boards which are outside of the scope of this legislation, on the argument that many bills have exemptions which give further clarity and clarification even though an obvious commonsense reading might say that it is not necessary or relevant, and on the argument that this bill itself, as it is written at this point in time, includes reference to municipalities or areas of the province which are under the governance of municipalities outside of Metropolitan Toronto, it seems to us that it would not be out of order to have amendments which clearly set out exemptions listing municipalities which will not be affected by this act, which is an act of municipal governance.

I will leave it at that and perhaps have an opportunity to respond.

Hon Mr Sterling: Mr Speaker, I had the opportunity to make a few remarks prior to the ruling by the Chair. I think this is a fairly simple matter when you really get down to it. The fact of the matter is this bill deals with the city of Toronto, the city of York, the city of East York, the city of Etobicoke, Scarborough and North York. The very title of the bill is "An Act to replace the seven existing municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto by incorporating a new municipality to be known as the City of Toronto."

The amendment that is put forward and the following amendments, some 800-odd, naming other municipalities are totally irrelevant to what this bill is really all about. This bill is clearly defining in the definitions section what areas it refers to. The member opposite talked about school boards and referred back to section 1, the definition of "local board," but failed to read on within the section. She read, "'local board' means a public utility" etc, and then at the end of that particular section it says, "with respect to any of the affairs of an old municipality...." An old municipality includes the "municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and its area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act." Therefore I believe there's no question that these are out of order, are irrelevant.

There have been numerous rulings by the Chair in the past when considering matters that are not contemplated by the bill that they should be ruled out of order. Otherwise there would be no really clear definition of how wide amendments could go in the committees or in committee of the whole.

Ms Castrilli: Mr Speaker, I propose to deal with four different issues in speaking to this order of the Chair in the absence of any direction from the Chair as to what it is that we are speaking to. The first issue is one of certainty, the second one of relevance, the third will be dealing with the legislative precedent and the fourth the Interpretation Act.

With respect to the issue of certainty, I think the member for Beaches-Woodbine has already pointed out that the wording in the NDP motion is consistent with some of the words and intent of the legislation. I refer specifically to clause 28(2)(a), which says section 23 does not apply with respect to school boards. It doesn't say school boards in Toronto, it doesn't say school boards in Metropolitan Toronto, it doesn't say school boards in any of the six cities; it says "school boards." I think a liberal interpretation of that — and I use that word not politically but judicially — would require you to interpret that as school boards in Ontario. Therefore it is consistent with the legislation before us to view the NDP amendment as in keeping with the spirit of the bill.

With respect to relevance, again Beauchesnes has been cited and I guess in reading Beauchesnes — I'm reading from the fifth edition and I assume the government is reading from the same — it says quite clearly in section 425:

"The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original which must, however, be relevant to the subject of the questions."

I submit to you that this amendment does increase the acceptability of the act because it is very specific in its nature as to where the act will have application and where it will not have application and therefore entirely relevant in keeping with the section.

Section 426 speaks again to the same question and again I would argue that it is totally relevant and in keeping with the dictates set out in Beauchesnes that this motion be considered in order.

The third issue that I wish to put before you comes from legislative precedent, and I would refer you to two in particular. One is a decision of March 20, 1889, journals page 140. It's a rather old amendment, but it does say that an amendment may extend the scope of the original motion. I won't read to you Hansard, but we do have it here if you wish to review it.

The second precedent comes from May 7, 1974, debates with Mr Rowe in the chair, and that decision even proposed to change the bill's title. It was found to be in order, again because relevant and consistent.

The fourth element is the Interpretation Act, and I will simply cite section 10 of the Interpretation Act, which says that any decision that is made must be — sorry, I don't have the exact citation here, but it must be given full and liberal construction within the intent and the meaning of the legislation. I would argue that amendments also fall under section 10 of the Interpretation Act, and I would ask you to review all of these authorities prior to making any ruling.

Ms Lankin: In summation, let me just respond to the Minister of Environment, who argued that the definitions section of Bill 103 went further than I read and spelled out, after talking about the number of boards, "or any other body established or exercising power under any general or special act with respect to any affairs of an old municipality or of the new city."

I think that further strengthens my argument, because school boards would obviously not come under the definition of "any other body exercising power under any general or special act with respect to any of the affairs of an old municipality," but if the Minister of Environment claims that I have not read on, let me do the same for him. If we were to read in the whole definition of "local board," you would see that under (d), in the list of things that it does not include, it says "(d) a school board."

So in the fact that the act itself is intended to deal with municipal governance and that the definition with respect to local boards makes it clear that school boards are not included, you have section 28, and I believe it would be important for you to look at section 28. If section 28 can exist within this legislation and can provide an exception for the applicability of this act to bodies that are other than bodies of municipal governments, as is the intent of this act, then I would argue that amendments, which specify the non-applicability of this act to municipal governments, which are more in line with and closer to the rest of the content of this legislation would have to be in order.

Lastly, just to reiterate, the fact that the act itself, in setting out in its schedule that the wards that are to be considered include wards of urban areas that are outside of Metropolitan Toronto, the area that the government argues the act is intended to deal with, must mean that an amendment which seeks to exclude from the applicability, exempt from the applicability, of the act those municipalities outside of Metropolitan Toronto would also be in order.

Mr Marchese: Mr Speaker, just as a final point, it would seem to me an argument that I want to make to emphasize the point the member for Beaches-Woodbine has made is to say the following. If you were to take our amendment in isolation of section 28, I would probably see you ruling against our amendment quite easily. But in the context of section 28, it is in that light I hope you would see this amendment, because if school boards are included there as exemptions, it seems to me that our amendment makes sense in that way.

I believe it is your duty to look at that section as you make this ruling on our amendment. If you do that, I think you're going to have a difficult time in ruling our amendment out of order, or at least it seems to me that you're going to have to comment on why the government has included section 28, which excludes school boards. It is my hope that you would comment on that as well as you make the ruling on our amendment.

The Speaker: I would like to take this opportunity to review the submissions and report back to you in an hour.

The House recessed from 0945 to 1046.

The Speaker: I'd like to thank everyone for their submissions. I have had an opportunity to reflect on members' submissions with respect to the admissibility of the amendments, which seek to create a new section to Bill 103. I have also reviewed the relevant parliamentary authorities and precedents.

Let me begin by indicating the essential nature of an amendment. According to page 336 of the 21st edition of Erskine May:

"The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question."

I have also reviewed what various authorities have said about the admissibility of amendments. For example, Beauchesne states at citation 698(1) of the sixth edition that "an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negated."

Secondly, Erskine May states at page 491 that "an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of a bill, or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration."

Finally, Australia's House of Representatives Practice states at page 398 of the second edition that "a new clause...will not be entertained if it is beyond the scope of the bill [or] is in effect a redrafting of a clause which is already in the bill."

I now turn from a recitation of the authorities to a discussion of the nature of Bill 103 and the impugned amendments.

Members will know that the long title of Bill 103 reads as follows: "An Act to replace the seven existing municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto by incorporating a new municipality to be known as the City of Toronto."

Members will also know that section 1 of the bill defines "old municipalities" as "the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and its area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act." That act, in turn, defines "area municipality" as "the municipality or corporation of the borough of East York, the city of Etobicoke, the city of North York, the city of Scarborough, the city of Toronto or the city of York." It seems clear to me that only these seven municipalities are affected by the bill.

In view of this, I have to say that I have some difficulty in comprehending the argument that amendments that essentially say that the bill does not apply to certain municipalities — in circumstances where the bill ipso facto excludes such municipalities from being subject to the bill — are not irrelevant. Whereas the bill uses inclusive language to indicate which municipalities are subject to the bill, the amendments use exclusive language to indicate which municipalities are not subject to the bill.

My point is this: How can the amendments be relevant if they're saying the same thing that is already mentioned or referenced in the bill? To use an analogy, the glass of water that is on your desk might be variously described as being half-full or half-empty, but it is still the same glass of water. There is a maxim in the field of statutory construction which conveys a similar concept that is very applicable. The maxim states "Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius," which means that the mention of one thing is the exclusion of another. I know we hear that in our everyday talk; I mentioned that to my son this morning. It means that the mention of one thing is the exclusion of another.

I appreciate hearing from the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms Lankin), the member for Fort York (Mr Marchese), and the member for Downsview (Ms Castrilli). I reflected very carefully on the submissions made with respect to the presence in the bill of clauses dealing with not just school board, but school boards outside of Metropolitan Toronto. However, the plain references to school boards in the bill would seem to provide the rationale for the presence of section 29 in the bill. There is no such connection between the impugned amendments and the bill as it currently stands, and so the school board argument is not really applicable.

Therefore, I am ruling out of order all amendments that seek to create a new section 29.1 by identifying a municipality that is not one of the municipalities already mentioned or referenced in the bill.

I thank members for their thoughtful submissions on this point of order.

House in committee of the whole.

The First Deputy Chair (Ms Marilyn Churley): Liberal motion —

Ms Castrilli: Madam Chair, I rise on a point of privilege which is quite serious. I hope you'll hear me out. Earlier in the proceedings I rose on a point of privilege and asked for unanimous consent of the House to deal with the issue of how I might be able to vote and represent my constituents in an appropriate manner, given the fact that the standing orders required me to stand to indicate a deferred vote.

Subsequent to that, the member for Mississauga South chose to rise in this House and use some rather disparaging language with respect to that particular decision. I think you could check Hansard and see the language that she used. Nevertheless, I think her comments were disrespectful towards this House. I think they showed contempt for the unanimous decision which this House took. They certainly were contemptuous and disrespectful of me, as I was trying to simply discharge my duties as a member of this House in a way that the standing orders do not allow me to do under the current circumstances, and frankly they're disrespectful of a wide segment of the population which through either partial or full disability cannot always comply to the rules that some of us would like to be able to comply to. I wonder if you might review the Hansard and ask the member in question to withdraw her comments.

The First Deputy Chair: Thank you for that point of privilege. I will undertake to review the Hansard — I don't know how long that's going to take — and will report back to you.

Ms Castrilli: That's acceptable, Madam Chair.

The First Deputy Chair: Liberal motion, 29.1:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Brooklawn Avenue in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

All in favour, please say —

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): On a point of order, Madam Chair: I believe this amendment is out of order on several grounds, the first of which I would submit deals with the fact that this is a matter that is foreign to this bill. It is not within the scope of the bill because it deals with heritage matters, and heritage matters are not dealt with in this bill.

It is also out of order because it is vague. I think certainly if one takes a look at a number of the terms used in the legislation, they're so vague and lacking in definition as to render the section, I believe, contrary to the rules of this House and of parliaments. I believe that is grounds that these amendments be struck out. Finally, I believe that these amendments would be in conflict with other acts that exist, where I think the same provision as is set out in subsection (2), which you've read.

On those grounds, I believe that these amendments should be struck out and are not properly before us.

Mr Colle: Madam Chair, I think this motion is very much in order. It is very germane to the bill because it deals with the municipalities this bill is trying to eliminate. But the government itself has amended the original act to now change the ward boundaries, which originally were supposed to be on the federal boundaries. With the amendments they propose, the new boundaries will now be based on the present city boundaries, the five cities and the one borough. In doing that, one of the rationales they used to make those amendments and establish these so-called community councils, which are part of this amendment — they did that in order to preserve local identification.

What we've done with these amendments is we've added and reinforced that intention of the government's own amendments, which were a dramatic reversal from the original intent of their bill before the amendments they put forward which created the community councils and re-established local identity, which they thought was going to be lost. What we're doing is reinforcing that attempt by the government in their amendments to preserve local identity. We're very specific in the way we're going to do it, and the way we're going to do it is to designate streets as the backbone of preserving or helping to keep the identity of the six municipalities. So nothing can be further from the truth than saying, as the member for —

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): It has nothing to do with it.

The First Deputy Chair: Order, please. I need to hear.

Ms Lankin: Your mike is not on.

The First Deputy Chair: Please turn on the mike. I want order. I need to hear. I need to listen very carefully to these points of order. Thank you.

1100

Mr Colle: The government side is saying this is foreign to this bill. Well, nothing could be more distant. This is an integral part of the government's own amendments. Therefore, the government's amendments should have been ruled out of order, because these in essence reinforce their own amendments.

The amendment here is very specific. It is not vague. It identifies the very street that is to be designated as historic, even, in the city or in the former city as they hope to implement with this bill. So certainly it is very much part of what this bill is all about. It is about the identity, the establishment of identity of the six municipalities into this new entity, that that be preserved. We are putting forth a very plain and understandable way of reinforcing that identity, and we hope to do this through a process that cities all across Ontario have done for decades, and that is, they do designate historic or heritage sites. That is part of the provincial mandate given to municipalities, and it is very much under their prerogative to do so. I think the province has given that authority and they also have the authority.

We're doing nothing unusual. It is fairly routine in terms of historical designation, and especially in light of this massive transformation that this bill imposes upon the six municipalities, I think it's critical that they be given an opportunity to retain their local identity. This amendment goes a long way to ensuring there's at least some mechanism for doing that and for the people who live in these municipalities, have that kind of opportunity to ensure they don't lose all their identity. The streets are, again, the backbone of that local identity.

I think it's certainly in order and is part and parcel of what the government's own amendments have been doing. So if this is ruled out of order, there's no way that the original motion to keep the government's own amendments of changing the ward boundaries or installing community councils based on the old cities — you know, you can't have it both ways. If they're going to defend the community councils and the new ward boundaries, they've got to defend this amendment too. Thank you.

Ms Lankin: Madam Chair, I would argue that the Liberal amendments are in order. The Liberal amendments deal with the concept of preservation of communities, and the preservation of communities is an important subject of this bill, as we have heard argued on many occasions by the minister himself. He has referred to this specially in regard to government amendments which concern both neighbourhood and community councils, and I would refer you to section 5 of the bill to see that set out.

In particular, section 5.2 of the bill, as amended — and those government amendments have already been passed by this committee of the whole — deals with the delegation of certain planning matters to community councils. We know that under other provincial legislation like the Planning Act and the Ontario Heritage Act, which govern these matters, there is a very strong interrelation between those pieces of legislation and, by virtue of the reference of community councils and their roles and what they may be prescribed to do by the new city council, the minister has introduced that interrelationship. So these pieces of legislation are all very much related to each other as they will affect citizens after the passage of Bill 103.

I would also refer you to subsection 5.2(4) and subsection 24(1)(e)(i). The bill contemplates the minister delegating more power to community councils as well. There is that option. So we know that, with respect to planning and its relationship to whether or not certain designations might come into effect which would affect planning matters such as the demolition or alteration to buildings or areas, this interrelationship is quite a critical one, and which one would support these amendments being in order.

I would also point to the fact that the Liberal amendment subclause (2) states, "In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail." So it enhances opportunities or protections that may be present in other legislation, and we know we have seen many acts that have gone through passage in this Legislature which have set clauses above and beyond any other piece of legislation that exists.

For those reasons, Madam Chair, I would argue that the Liberal amendments are in fact in order.

Ms Castrilli: On a point of order, Madam Chair: I'd like to respond to the points raised by the Attorney General with respect to this point of order, and point out briefly that he has three grounds.

One is that the amendments are foreign to this bill, and he cites Beauschene for that proposition. In fact, I think nothing could be further from the truth. This legislation has to do with amalgamation and the implications of amalgamation, and therefore our amendments are within the spirit of the intent of the legislation. It is not intended to seek to broaden the scope of the intent of the legislation, but rather to be very specific about what it is that we mean by amalgamation.

His second point with respect to that is that it is obvious that the government has, by its own state of intention in moving the amendments that it has, intended to protect the community and the identity of communities, and the Liberal amendments are within the spirit of those amendments. Surely if their amendments are to be considered in order at some point, then ours would follow suit because we are intending to maintain the community and the community heritage that existed prior to this bill and will continue to exist until after this bill comes into effect.

I want to dispense with the first and the third first. The third point was that this is in conflict with other legislation and therefore should be avoided. I think that that is a good and laudable goal, and that as legislators, one of our obligations is to make sure that there aren't conflicts between pieces of legislation that would make the workability and the enforcement of that legislation difficult.

I would like to point out, however, that within the legislation itself the government has seen to this argument, and subsections 26(1) and (2) speak to that.

Subsection 26(1) says, "This act applies despite any general or special act and despite any regulation made under another act, and in the event of a conflict between this act and another act or a regulation made under another act, this act prevails."

That essentially eliminates the conflict argument that the Attorney General has put forward, but it becomes even more specific in subsection (2), which says, "In the event of conflict between a regulation made under subsection 24(1) and a provision of this act or of any other act or regulation, the regulation made under subsection 24(1) prevails."

So there are provisions in the legislation to ensure that conflict does not exist. The government has already seen to that, for that we commend them and we think therefore that that argument is not applicable in this case.

As to the second argument that was made, which is that the motion itself is vague, I think that is certainly not the case and we could debate that quite at length. I'm not entirely sure on what grounds the Attorney General believes that this is vague, but we would contend that the section is based on principles of law. "Heritage" is a defined word. I will rephrase that. "Heritage" is a matter of law, as indeed is "historic," and there are copious statutes and regulations which will point to that fact.

Therefore, Madam Chair, without going too much further, there is certainly plenty of legislative precedent that we could cite here at this stage, and if you so wish, I would be very happy to go into it. But we think that the three grounds that have been advanced by the Attorney General, that this is foreign to the bill, that it is vague and

The First Deputy Chair: Thank you.

My ruling is that I consider this amendment to be in order.

Liberal motion —

Hon Mr Harnick: Point of order, Madam Chair: I would like to appeal that ruling to the Speaker.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay. We will await the arrival of the Speaker.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the speaker.

The First Deputy Chair: Mr Speaker, the committee has risen because there has been a challenge to a ruling that I gave.

The Speaker: Thank you, and the challenge came from?

The First Deputy Chair: The Attorney General.

The Speaker: The Attorney General.

Hon Mr Harnick: Mr Speaker, the amendment before you deals with the designation of streets in Metropolitan Toronto as I guess heritage sites, and I submit to you that that is something that is an improper amendment quite simply because, as my first submission, it is not part of the original bill.

I refer you initially to Beauchesne at page 176, item 579, "An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved," and what I say quite simply is that this bill does not deal with heritage sites or designating streets or any particular properties as heritage properties, and therefore, all these amendments are not proper amendments.

I also refer to page 207 of Beauchesne in this regard where it sets out that, "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negated," and what I say to you is that this is beyond the scope of the bill and therefore it should not be acceptable, and as an amendment, should be thrown out.

My second ground that I wish to point out to you is that when we take a look at this amendment, and it's very important that the amendment be reviewed, I submit to you that the amendment is vague, and at page 207 of the Beauchesne book, if we take a look under item 698 again, "An amendment is inadmissible if it refers to, or is not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, or if it is otherwise incomplete."

It also states that, "An amendment is out of order if it is offered at the wrong place in the bill, if it is tendered to the committee in a spirit of mockery or if it is vague or trifling" — not vague and trifling — "vague or trifling." I submit to you that this bill is vague in that a number of the significant terms used in the legislation are so vague and lacking in definition as to render it difficult and perhaps impossible for well-intentioned citizens and even the courts to interpret the legislation and comply with it or give effect to its terms.

I wanted to point out to you that if you take a look at the terms that are used, "heritage," "communities," "preserved," "character," "sustained," "street" and "use," none of these are defined, and quite simply, if we go back to Beauchesne at page 207 under item 698(4)(a), "An amendment is inadmissible if it refers to, or is not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, or if it is otherwise incomplete," and quite simply, this is I believe incomplete.

There are a couple of other items I want to point out to you. The bill states, and the section in subsection (2) is very clear: In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail. At the same time, if we take a look at the Ontario Heritage Act and we take a look at subsection 68(3), it states: "Where there is a conflict between this act or the regulations and any other act or regulations, this act or the regulations shall prevail." I think that we have here, as a third submission, a conflict, and it seems to me that that as well is a reason to demonstrate that this is incomplete, vague and should not be permitted.

There are a couple of other items that I wish to refer to you that I think are important. Unlike the Ontario Heritage Act, which provides the closest and somewhat parallel approach to the proposed amendment, the latter would provide no procedural or other rights to any resident or to the new city to participate in any way in the decision made by the Legislature designating the street in question to be of heritage significance and thereby applying to it automatically whatever consequences of designation flow from the legislation itself. Jurisdiction under the Ontario Heritage Act is exercised in Metropolitan Toronto at the area municipal level and would become a power or responsibility of the council of the new city under Bill 103.

Under subsection 29(1) of the Ontario Heritage Act, where a municipal council intends to designate a property to be of historic or architectural value or interest under part IV of the act, it is required to publish a notice of intention to designate in a newspaper having general circulation in the municipality and serve that notice upon the owner of the property that is being affected. The notice is required to contain an adequate description of the property. Any person objecting to the proposed designation may serve notice of that fact upon the municipality. After a hearing held pursuant to the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, the review board reports back to the council.

What I say, Speaker, is quite simply that this amendment is not properly part of this bill and it's vague, it's in conflict with other law that already deals with this and it's outside the scope of the bill, and quite simply, if you take a look at all of the items that I just read to you, an amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee, and what this attempts to do is to amend or affect the Ontario Heritage Act, and I state that proposition to you, set out again on page 207 of Beauchesne under item 698(8)(a). So I say that those are grounds to rule this amendment, and all of the subsequent 1,490 amendments naming streets, out of order and they should not be here.

Ms Castrilli: Speaker, thank you for coming back again. The Attorney General has asserted three grounds upon which he would seek to have you rule the amendment out of order. The one before us is the one pertaining to Brooklawn Avenue. The grounds he has cited are that the amendment is foreign to the bill, that it is vague or trifling and that it is a conflict with other acts.

I'd like to start firstly by dealing with the motion itself. I think we ought to be very clear what we're talking about. Section 29.1(1):

"Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating" — in this case Brooklawn Avenue — "in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area."

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Is this foreign to the legislation's intent? I would argue, indeed we argue, that it is not. The legislation is about amalgamation. It is about the powers of the new municipality under that amalgamation. It is about being consistent with the government's amendments, preserving the old municipalities by a series of councils and by linking those councils in a very real way to the new amalgamated form, and therefore it is very much within the spirit of the legislation which we are considering. If anything, I would think the government would be embarrassed to argue what it has argued, because its own amendments point to the uniqueness of the six areas which are about to be amalgamated into one. I would think they would want to have the kind of provision in the act that strengthens their own assertion.

On the issue of whether this is vague, the Attorney General has indicated a number of words that he finds objectionable: "heritage," "preserve," "sustain," "street" and "use" were the ones I picked out. I would submit that some of these are words of common English usage: "sustain," "street" and "use." Certainly we're not going to start to define what we mean by a street. If his challenge is to the word "heritage" — we can begin with that — I think the term is hardly vague. The Oxford English Dictionary defines "vague" as meaning indistinct, not clearly expressed or identified or uncertain or ill-defined meaning or character, imprecise, inexact in thought or expression or understanding. Words and Phrases ask whether the provision is insensible and meaningless in the sense that it is impossible to attach any reasonable meaning to the terms contained in it.

In this case, the motion is neither indistinct nor imprecise nor inexact in thought. Nothing could be further from the truth. It attempts to say very clearly what it is that it sets out to do.

The amendment is clearly designed to preserve the character of the local communities, which are being swallowed up by the megacity by explicitly acknowledging the fact that the street in question is a heritage street, is then identified as a street of importance in that particular community by recognizing the significance of this simple fact to residents of what is defined in the act as the "urban area." It cannot therefore be said that this motion is vague or that it is impossible to attach any reasonable meanings on the terms contained in it.

If the word "heritage" is the word that the government disputes, then I would submit to you that "heritage" is a matter of law. There's ample evidence with respect to that in our statutes and regulations. In fact, the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, chapter 24, 1988, deals with heritage in subsection 3(1). The Canadian heritage act, passed in 1995, gives jurisdiction to the minister of a whole series of matters which could be constituted as heritage. The Heritage Railway Stations Protection Act talks about heritage with respect to railways. That was proclaimed in 1988. The Canadian Heritage Languages Institute, proclaimed in 1991, deals with heritage that applies to language. I should point out that there were no less than 161 records of heritage in Canadian statutes and regulations. We have our own Ontario Heritage Act, to which the minister has made reference, and no less an authority than the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms sets out in section 27 the importance of heritage in our individual lives.

It's hard to imagine a less vague word than "heritage" under those circumstances as a matter of law. Words and Phrases sets out another test for uncertainty or vagueness which I will read to you:

"A bylaw cannot be said to be invalid for uncertainty merely because its terms require to be construed or it contains words which admit of more than one meaning. The test is whether, read as a whole and with its preamble, the meaning and intent are clear."

I think in this particular case it is obvious that the intent is clear. That is the only substantive word to which the minister has made reference. The others, as I've indicated, are words in common English usage and they're certainly — I can't imagine a word such as "street" having to be defined in any way and being vague for the purposes of this legislation.

Even if you find that the word "heritage," Speaker, is vague or perhaps has more than one meaning, I would submit to you that the motion does not turn on the word "heritage," that you in fact could take out the word "heritage" and it would still be a motion which is acceptable and doesn't alter the meaning in any way. Read as a whole, the meaning and intent of the amendment is very clear, that we want to designate certain streets for the use of the citizens of that particular area. So the motion is not vague but very precise, very exact in meaning and can stand as a whole even without the word that the Attorney General has cited.

I want to deal a little bit with vagueness in how it has been dealt with in legislative precedents. That may be of some assistance to you as well. The only Legislative Assembly precedent that we've been able to find dates back to 1904. The journals of the Legislative Assembly for April 7, 1904, has a motion:

"That the report of the committee be not now concurred in but the bill be recommitted to the committee of the whole House with instructions to incorporate therein the provisions of Bill 89 to amend the assessment act in that particular instance and to strike out from said Bill 72 all provisions inconsistent with Bill 89."

In that case the motion was held to be out of order because it was entirely too vague to be received. Also on the ground that Bill 89 was not in the hands of the House, having been referred to a select committee. That is not the case here. This is the only legislative precedent that exists and may be easily distinguished from the case in hand. First, the 1904 motion attempted to modify the provisions of one bill by incorporating the provisions of another. That's not what we are trying to do here. It was trying to strike out all of those provisions which were inconsistent with the bill. Again, that's not the situation here.

We are dealing with a simple motion that does not refer to or incorporate the provisions of any other legislation and that does not require the deletion from or insertion of any other elements into the body of the bill.

Further, the 1904 motion purported to deal with a bill that was not properly in the hands of the House. That again is not the case here. We are properly charged with the bill as a committee of the whole to review the bill clause by clause and there are no other foreign elements that are before us. I would submit that you must use caution in applying this precedent to the case at hand because it is easily distinguishable and quite frankly it is not a very convincing example of a ruling of an amendment out of order for vagueness.

You should also bear in mind that since the only legislative precedent that we have on vagueness dates back to 1904, I think that simple fact alone points to the caution that has been used by Speakers in previous legislatures in approaching amendments and the vagueness of amendments. It indicates that while the Speaker has the discretion, they have used it very sparingly and certainly have not used it to kill amendments which are properly before the House.

Finally, I refer you to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, the sixth edition, at page 175, which reads: "An amendment cannot be ruled out because of its vagueness." This is supported by a precedent of the House of Commons in Canada, cited in the Journal of the House of Commons, dated March 30, 1870. In that case, the motion purported to add the words: "...and that such steps should be taken as to render impossible any such grant or provisions to the question that was put before the government."

The ruling of the Speaker is noteworthy and I'll cite it for you. The Speaker said the motion is certainly very vague but he cannot say that the House cannot express a vague opinion. In other words, the motion in that case was objected to because of its alleged vagueness and it was held by the Speaker that vagueness alone was not sufficient to kill the motion and rule it out of order.

That precedent, Speaker, I think is on point. Even if you should find that the terms that we have indicated are vague, it is not our contention that the terms that are used in this particular amendment are vague. In fact, quite to the contrary. But even if you should find they are vague, there are cases on point which would require you to be very cautious in ruling it out of order.

I guess the last point I'd like to make with respect to vagueness is the Interpretation Act itself. As you know, section 10 of the Interpretation Act provides that every act of the Legislature is to be remedial and shall, in the words of section 10, "receive such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as will best ensure the attainment of the object of the act according to its true intent, meaning and spirit."

It's submitted that the intent and spirit of this amendment is well within the act. It is not anything that goes beyond the act and section 10 should apply to amendments as well as legislation and that, therefore, it's incumbent on you to give the fairest and largest and most liberal construction you can give in interpreting this motion.

In exercising your discretion, therefore, Speaker, as to whether this amendment is out of order for vagueness, I know you will use great care and your decision, I would submit, should be based on looking at this as a motion which is properly before the House, whose terms are clearly identified and for you to kill the amendment would in fact have the effect of frustrating the objects of the legislation and, therefore, those of the minority in this House.

On the third point that the Attorney General cites, which deals with conflict with other acts, again it's hard to understand what the argument is. The legislation is crystal clear on this point and the Attorney General cited it himself. Subsection 26(1) says:

"This act applies despite any general or special act and despite any regulation made under another act, and in the event of a conflict between this act and another act or a regulation made under another act, this act prevails."

It would seem to me that if the Attorney General is concerned about the application of the Ontario Heritage Act that this provision is conclusive on that point, that it is intended to prevail over the other legislation dealing with the same subject matter.

Finally, I'd like to go back to the first proposition and that is, the amendment that has been put before you is an amendment which is totally consistent with the purpose of the act. It is not vague, it is not trifling, it is not foreign and it is not intended to be in conflict with any other legislation. Quite to the contrary, we view it as a way to enhance the stated purpose of this act and the stated intent of the amendments which the government themselves have moved. I would ask you to rule the amendment in order.

Ms Lankin: Mr speaker, I think you've heard exhaustive arguments on this and so I intend to be very brief. Dealing with the concept that this amendment should be ruled out of order because it is foreign to the bill, let me say first of all, the Liberal amendment deals with preservation of communities. The concept of preservation of communities is an important subject of the bill that is before us.

The minister himself has referred to this often, especially with regard to the government amendments which have already passed concerning neighbourhood and community councils which are contained in section 5 of the bill. Section 5.2 of the bill, as amended, deals with the delegation of planning matters to community councils. We know that there is a great interrelation between the matters prescribed by the Planning Act and the Ontario Heritage Act already with respect to planning, and the specific reference within this legislation brings those three bills into a matter or a state of interrelationship.

May I also say that under subsection 5.4(4) and under subsection 24(1) this bill contemplates that the minister may delegate more power to community councils, so I do not believe that it can be ruled out of order on the argument of it being foreign to the bill.

On the argument of vagueness, the member for Downsview has given you extensive arguments on that. I would simply reinforce the point that, given that the last time an amendment was ruled out of order on the argument of vagueness was in 1904, Speakers have obviously given great caution in that the standard that must be met must be higher in order for that argument of the Attorney General to succeed.

With respect to the argument of conflict, I believe that section 26 as it is set out, which sets this bill above and beyond any other bill or special statute and/or regulation, clarifies already that there is not a conflict and that any conflict would be resolved in favour of this bill, which is temporarily in time the latest one to have been passed.

The Attorney General's specific argument under conflict dealt with the Ontario Heritage Act and the due process set out under that act for consultation and for appeal procedures etc. I would say that is irrelevant to whether or not the amendment is in order. That may be a very, very good argument for members of this Legislature to vote against an amendment such as this. I find that a compelling debate point, but I do not find that a point that is relevant to an argument of whether or not there is conflict. Therefore, the amendment would be out of order.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm just going to go back to the Attorney General.

Hon Mr Harnick: I'd just like to add a couple of comments. One comment is that good legislative planning and drafting dictates that new legislation should not be designed in such a way as to be in conflict with existing legislation. I think that's basic, and I'd make that submission.

I would also indicate to you that a designation of "heritage" to a particular street really has nothing to do with Bill 103, which is an amalgamation bill and which is a governance structure bill. What this amendment does is attempt to amend the Heritage Act, which is not before us. That's clearly improper and I reiterate my comment to refer you to Beauchesne at page 207, the bottom of the page, (8)(a). It says that you can't use amendments in this act to amend effectively another act, and that's what's being done here.

As well, I reiterate from your earlier ruling where you cited an Australian precedent that you can't submit new clauses in a bill that are beyond the scope of the bill. I think that's what's happening here, and therefore these amendments are not proper.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Just on that last point, Mr Speaker, let's be abundantly clear that municipalities are creatures of the province and if the province has a certain power, it can override the municipal powers at any time.

Let's deal with the definition of "heritage" first. It is not defined anywhere in legislation, and it's certainly not defined in the Ontario Heritage Act. However, section 2 makes it abundantly clear and I'll quote it to you: "The minister...may determine policies, priorities and programs for the conservation, protection and preservation of the heritage of Ontario."

Hon Mr Harnick: That's a different act. What does this mean?

Mr Gerretsen: This is the Ontario Heritage Act that I'm referring to, which is the act that the Attorney General has been referring to. All I'm saying is that "heritage" is not defined in the act, yet the minister has the power to determine policies and set priorities with respect to the heritage of Ontario. That then is interpreted by the fact that municipalities may designate buildings of architectural and historic value. It may also, in section 40, in effect, designate heritage conservation districts. Let me tell you, just as an aside, this was I believe the only act that was ever proclaimed outside of this Legislature. It was done in the city of Kingston in 1979, and we have about 500 historically designated buildings and also two historically designated districts in our municipality.

The point simply is this: If the province can give those powers to municipalities to take those kind of actions, it surely has those powers itself. We're not here arguing right now on the merits, as to whether or not the amendment should or should not pass; that's already been decided in the one hour that was set aside for debate on the amendments. We can't, unfortunately, debate it, and whether or not a person may want to vote in favour or against this amendment is something that should be decided when the amendment is put. But certainly the province has every power that it has at its disposal to designate any particular street as a historic district within the heritage confines.

"Heritage" is not defined but the Minister of Culture and Recreation has the power, in effect, to designate and to set priorities in these matters if she so wishes. If she has that power, then surely the government as a whole has that power to set that in this particular act.

Just to reiterate a comment that was made earlier, this is all about communities. That's what we're trying to protect here. That's what this demonstration over the last six or seven days has been all about. That's what the Citizens for Local Democracy are all about. What they are saying is that one megacity will not protect the individual communities and municipalities that make up that new megacity.

So certainly, the amendments, in my opinion, are totally order. They are an attempt to clearly illustrate that we want to make sure that those particular streets, those particular communities, those particular districts are of heritage value to the province of Ontario.

Finally, the other point that I would like to make is — I guess I've made both points, about as forcefully as I can. Thank you.

The Speaker: The member for Algoma.

Mr Tom Froese (St Catharines-Brock): Welcome back.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): I'm glad to be here. I've listened very carefully, and I will not prolong the debate, but I want to raise a couple of specifics.

First, it seems to me that the government cannot have it both ways. It can't have a heritage act, with a minister responsible for preserving heritage, which does not itself define the word, and then argue that unless the word is defined here, it is vague, in this legislation. If the Attorney General's argument holds, then I guess the minister responsible for carrying out responsibilities under the Ontario Heritage Act is doing so in a very vague way.

This is clearly in line with the purposes, ironically, of the government's own amendments. Their amendments, they argue, were put in order to preserve communities and to assist in assuring people that communities and community distinctiveness would be preserved. In my view, the Liberal amendments enhance the government's amendments in preserving community. In that sense, if the government's amendments are indeed in order and are designed to preserve community, then these amendments should indeed also be found in order as they in fact help to carry out the purposes of the government's own amendments.

I would like you to turn, in considering this, to one other point which was made at the very end of the Attorney General's first intervention on this matter to you. That was when he said that this particular amendment, which deals with Brooklawn Avenue, if you rule, that your ruling should apply to all similar amendments put forward that are deemed to have been put, as per the time allocation motion. I understand that in a previous ruling on NDP amendments that were of a similar nature, the ruling was taken to apply to all of those amendments.

I would want you to consider this very carefully, not just in this context, but in the context of what precedential effects such an approach might have, because it is my view that, under the time allocation motion, all amendments are deemed to have been put, and we are only now dealing with one amendment. If indeed this amendment is ruled out of order, then the question is, do we then have to move to the next amendment and have a ruling on it after it is read? Because that is a very important matter that may not just have influence on what happens in this particular situation, but perhaps on future situations that may face this House and other legislative assemblies under the British parliamentary system.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, it would certainly be our contention that not only this particular amendment is out of order, but there are some 1,490, to be as precise as we can be, Liberal amendments dealing with random streets, as far as we can determine, some 1,490 picked out of a hat, as far as we can determine, across Metropolitan Toronto.

This debate seems to have hinged, to some degree, on the definition of the word "heritage." The member for Downsview has referred us to the Ontario Heritage Act. The member for Kingston and The Islands has referred us to the Ontario Heritage Act.

Mr Gerretsen: So has the Attorney General.

Hon David Johnson: Yes, and so has the Attorney General, quite clearly, because that's what we're involved with here is the Ontario Heritage Act and that indeed is our submission. The member for Kingston and The Islands has gone further and said that this involves the Minister of Citizenship, Culture and Recreation and in his comments he alluded to the minister. And that in fact is our submission, Mr Speaker, that this is an amendment and this is supported by the statements from the opposition parties; the movers of the very amendment themselves are directing us to the Ontario Heritage Act, and that's their claim, that that's where we should be looking to.

I bring you back to the point made by the Attorney General, who has read from Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Beauchesne's sixth edition, page 207: "An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee." Clearly the Ontario Heritage Act is not before this committee. Yet, by their own words, the members from the Liberal Party putting forward the amendment are directing to this very act and inferring that that's precisely what is to be amended.

In terms of vagueness, Mr Speaker, I don't think there's really any doubt out there in the real world that this is vague. You have to make the ruling in this particular House, what is vague and what isn't vague but —

Ms Lankin: Are you saying this is not the real world?

Hon David Johnson: I think most people would agree with me that this is not the real world, and particularly after five or six days of whatever we've gone through.

What is the meaning, as this has been put forward? Is the meaning, in terms of heritage, to designate simply the name of 1,490 streets, just the name itself? Is it to designate, because the Ontario Heritage Act pertains —

Mr Gerretsen: Yes, to what? Just a minute.

Hon David Johnson: — and I see the member for Kingston and The Islands saying yes, that what he had intended is streets, so some physical nature. So are we talking about the pavement, the actual street itself, the tarmac or the pavement? Are we talking about —

Interjection.

Hon David Johnson: Is that the right word? Are we talking about the municipal property, all of the road allowance that would be associated, the sidewalks and the grass on the road allowance on people's front yards and the fire hydrants and the utilities? Is that what we're talking about? Mr Speaker, are we talking about other municipal property that would appear on the street such as parks or recreation complexes or community centres or any other municipal property?

Or, Mr Speaker, are we talking, as the Ontario Heritage Act usually refers to, about particular private properties? Would we be talking about private properties one would normally deem to be of significance in heritage? Or would we be talking about all homes, all business — and I see the member for Kingston and The Islands nodding yes. In his view, that's probably what we're talking about all homes, all businesses, every single property privately owned, publicly owned property, which has enormous consequences.

Now that may be beyond the scope of how you wish to rule, but that has enormous consequences. That means that every single building on these streets would be so designated — and I can see by the pall that has gone over the Liberals now that they may be starting to understand the consequences of this. It means, Mr Speaker, that —

Mr Gerretsen: Point of order, Mr Speaker: The government House leader is arguing the merits —

The Speaker: With the greatest respect to the member for Kingston and The Islands and the government House leader, I'm in a point of order at this point in time. You're in order, let's try and keep on topic. I appreciate the comments.

Hon David Johnson: I appreciate that, Mr Speaker. I'm just trying to indicate the vagueness of this whole issue and that structures cannot change the colour of the paint, if they're so designated, cannot change the roof, cannot change the moulding of any of the properties, cannot make any single change, and it's generally acknowledged that the value of properties diminishes and most people have great concerns about this.

I will move on from that because we can all understand that there's a wide range of possibilities that this may not include and I'm sure there'll be many legal battles if any of these actually did go through.

The member from Downsview says that this doesn't hinge on the word "heritage." Perhaps she says that because she may begin to understand the vagueness and the problems associated with that. However, I would point out to you that the very title of the paragraph says "Preserving local heritage." I would submit that indeed it's very integral to that.

Mr Speaker, notwithstanding all of that — and I believe that the Attorney General has put forward a solid case. I would hope very much that you would agree with the case that this is clearly out of order; amending an act has nothing to do with this. I would simply note and point out to you the obvious that if, notwithstanding all of that, you're looking at other situations that previously you did make a very sensible ruling for a batch of other amendments, some 8,000 amendments which I believe all parties have now acknowledged was a very sensible ruling in terms of simply acknowledging the street name.

The Speaker: That's not the point, government House leader, that's not the point.

Hon David Johnson: That's not the main point, but I simply point that out to you.

The Speaker: I would never suggest anyone can't have a point of order, and I think the member for Beaches-Woodbine was very good in her synopsis. It has been exhaustive. I think I've grasped as much as there is. But I'm prepared to listen to more argument. If you'd be concise and to the point, it would be profoundly helpful.

Mr Colle: I'm just going to be very direct. When we sat through the committee hearings, deputant after deputant expressed a concern about the loss of identity, the loss of neighbourhood. That was the predominant theme of the deputants. I don't know how better I could, as a member of this Legislature, respond to their deputations. They basically asked us to find a way of trying to preserve their local neighbourhood, the identity of their streets and the identity of their municipalities. That's what they came to us to implore.

The Speaker: With the greatest of respect, member for Oakwood, I appreciate that and I think that's what you're trying to do here. Now I'm trying to rule whether or not it's in order.

Mr Colle: Therefore in context — what we've done is basically responded to that and reinforced what the government did in their amendments when they established community councils, when the government House leader went all over the municipalities saying, "Oh, we're going to preserve local identities and we're going to change the ward boundaries to do that and we're going to establish community councils to do that." Therefore, you can't have it both ways.

That's what we're doing with this amendment. We're reinforcing what the government tried to do in its community council amendment, in its ward boundaries amendment, which reflects, as they say in their legislation, the older municipalities. If you look at their 5.1 amendment, "There shall be six community councils, one for each part of the urban areas that was an area municipality under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act." What we're doing is enhancing that by saying we're going to be more detailed in preserving local identity. If you read our motion, it talks about our intent here. That is what I think, as the Speaker, you have to look at, the intent.

"The heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained" — how? — "by designating Brooklawn Avenue in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street." What better way would there be of enhancing the government's own amendment? How much more legitimate an amendment could you have in an attempt to basically respond to the deputations and the concerns that the government had about losing local identity. The government's arguing out of both sides of its mouth on this if it votes against this amendment.

Mrs McLeod: Mr Speaker, I appreciate that you have asked us to be as brief and as specific as possible in our arguments. I, in turn, appreciate your attentiveness to our arguments, so I will not reiterate what has already been argued. I would like, therefore, to make really just very brief points on the three areas that the Attorney General has suggested should be considered in considering whether this amendment is in order.

As the member for Downsview has said, the first argument that he made was that this is foreign to the bill. I would ask you to consider that this is indeed not foreign to the bill, that it is very specific to the consequences of what will be lost should this bill proceed. It is specific to what will be lost notwithstanding the amendments that the government brought in at the beginning of this process of committee of the whole in its attempt to respond to the concern about the loss of uniqueness of community.

The Attorney General this afternoon has suggested that this bill is not about community and heritage, that this bill applies to government structures and the change in municipal and government structures. I suggest that what the Attorney General is proposing, and what his government believes, is that we should all just ignore the consequences of the legislation which they are taking through. I would argue, Mr Speaker, that it is the responsibility of this Legislature, as it should be the responsibility of government, to consider the consequences of the legislation.

In our view, what we are doing with these amendments is attempting in some way to mitigate the most serious consequence, which is the loss of community. I believe, that any attempt to mitigate consequences which are indeed lawful in their presentation should be considered in order. I don't believe it's our purpose to debate those amendments here today. We would love the opportunity to debate each and every one of the amendments, but clearly within the government House leader's time allocation motion, we were restricted from debate after the first hour.

I will not raise any arguments under the second contention of the Attorney General, which is vagueness, because I believe this has been well argued by the member for Downsview.

The third argument then was that this was in conflict with other legislation. Again, it has been argued by the member for Kingston and The Islands and the member for Downsview and I will not reiterate their argument, because I think what the member for Downsview said is that this has been well protected in this legislation, because the government has given itself total power. If there is anything in any other act which is contradictory to this act, this act supersedes it. That's the way the government protects itself against legislation which might be seen to be in contradiction with any other legislation.

The point I would simply like to make under this argument that the Attorney General has made is in response to his argument when he raised the issue of the Ontario Heritage Act. It was the Attorney General's original submission that made the debate to some extent turn on this point, not our submission. When he raised the issue of the Ontario Heritage Act, his contention was that that act required consultation which could not be provided for with this amendment.

I would argue, firstly, that if the amalgamation of all of these municipalities can proceed without consultation, then it is certainly within the government's power to designate heritage sites without such consultation.

I would further argue that if the Attorney General is concerned about the contradiction in legislation, if legislation is drafted and presented which contradicts other legislation, then this amalgamation legislation, which amalgamates municipalities without consultation, is in itself in direct contradiction of legislation under Bill 26, which has had a quite different process for the amalgamation of all other municipalities outside of Metropolitan Toronto. So I really don't believe that the argument of the Attorney General can be considered in this instance if it's not to be applied to the entire bill and have the entire bill ruled out of order because it is contradictory to other legislation.

Having said that, I would recognize, however, that the issue here is whether or not the amendments are in order. If the government does not feel that the designation of these areas as heritage sites in order to make some attempt to preserve the uniqueness of communities which will be lost by this government's forced amalgamation, if they don't consider it appropriate, they are free to vote against our amendments. The issue here is not whether you are for or against it; the issue is whether they are in order. I trust you will rule they are.

Ms Castrilli: Mr Speaker, just a few short comments since I laid out my position earlier on. We are here today because the large majority of residents of greater Toronto, both through the referendum and through the hearings, have indicated that they care about their communities. We've tried to structure amendments that responded to that, and I've argued before you that the amendments deal, yes, with heritage sites of significance, but even if you find that that is a vague term, and that is what the Attorney General has put before you, that the amendment stand on its own without the word "heritage," maintaining that feeling that people have that their communities are important without going as far as to designate them heritage.

I'd like to say to the Attorney General and to the House leader that it wasn't our intention to bring up the heritage act, in fact it was only in response to their dealing with it. We don't think that our amendment turns on the word "heritage" at all. It is a descriptive term, but the amendment can stand on its own.

I'd also like you to consider two points: One is that it's customary for legislation to have conflict provisions. Yes, the Attorney General cited the Ontario Heritage Act provisions. There are provisions in this particular legislation before us. Every single piece of legislation that we have says in case of a conflict, this act prevails. I think to cite that argument in this case is to cite no argument at all.

The last point I'd like you to bear in mind is that our amendment doesn't deal with every street in greater Metropolitan Toronto. Our series of amendments, if you decide then to rule on all of them — we are only dealing with a few streets in all of Metropolitan Toronto to maintain the community base and the significance that people have attached to those streets.

It is very important to consider each amendment on its own, because this is not any kind of computer-generated set of amendments, as the government has alleged before of other types of amendments. These are very careful choices, and they're presented in a spirit of trying to accommodate the individual characters of the six communities that are being amalgamated into one.

The Speaker: I'd like to thank everyone for your submissions. They're getting to be superb, to be quite honest, and it's making my job a lot easier when we go back to research. I would like to take a 30-minute break to examine this, and I apologize to the member for St Catharines-Brock, but sometimes you need 30 minutes just to get through the submissions.

Interjections.

The Speaker: You've all heard about unanimous consent.

The House recessed from 1209 to 1312.

The Speaker: I've had an opportunity to reflect on the lengthy submissions of members on this point of order. Let me deal with the issues one at a time.

On submissions made with respect to conflict, the Speaker is not a drafter or interpreter of legislation. That is for the drafters of legislation and courts respectively. Nor is it within the province of the Speaker to provide a legal opinion on how the amendment and the bill that are before me, if passed, are to be reconciled with each other or legislation or to otherwise interpret the legislation.

The resolution of potential conflicts is for those who are charged with that responsibility. For this reason, I cannot give further consideration to legal or quasi-legal submissions made by various members.

Turning to the submission on vagueness, I appreciate hearing the thoughtful submission of the Attorney General and the member for Downsview, Ms Castrilli. The fact that there have been so few rulings on vagueness in this House and in other parliamentary jurisdictions suggests to me an obvious point, namely, it will be a rare situation indeed when an amendment will be ruled out of order for vagueness.

No one around this place can recall the last time an amendment has been ruled out of order on the grounds of vagueness. That does not mean that it cannot happen now or in the future, but I have to say that I do not find the amendment to be vague. I really do not have any difficulty in understanding this amendment, and it'll be for others to interpret the words of the amendment if the amendment is eventually incorporated into any resulting legislation.

With respect to the submissions dealing with amendments that are beyond the scope of the bill, I find that the amendment is not beyond the scope of the bill. Earlier this sessional day, I found certain government amendments in order that sought to introduce community councils. Similar submissions as to their admissibility were made at that time. For those same reasons, I find the amendment before me is also in order.

With respect to the submission that the amendment amends legislation that is not open in the bill, I have to say that the amendment does not in fact do this. Members will know that the presence of words like "despite" and "pursuant" that refer to another piece of legislation does not signify that the amendment seeks to amend other legislation.

Finally, and I want to deal with this point as well, I want to respond to submissions that were made with respect to the Speaker's ability to rule out of order a series of similar amendments at the same time.

I want to be very clear with this House about this issue: There can be no doubt that pursuant to time allocation orders the amendments, all of the amendments, are deemed to have been moved. That being the case, there can be no doubt that in a proper case, the amendments can be ruled out of order as a series or a package of amendments.

In closing, then, I find the amendments to be in order. I thank the members who made submissions for their assistance. I therefore uphold the ruling of the Chair.

House in committee of the whole.

The Chair (Mr Gilles E. Morin): A Liberal motion, 29.1:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those municipalities sustained, by designating Brooklawn Avenue in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. The vote is deferred.

Mr Wildman: Point of order, Mr Chair: Late last evening there was a decision by the Chair that we should stand. We're quite willing to stand if that is your wish, but we would like it clarified in relation to the previous ruling by the Chair.

The Chair: If that was agreed, then it will be respected, but you also have to designate who is sitting. Would you mind doing that now? So two NDPs and five Liberals.

Hon David Johnson: Point of order, Mr Chair: I just wanted to confirm on behalf of the government that it was our suggestion, and there was unanimous consent, that the members would not have to stand during the proceedings for the vote in this regard.

The Chair: That's correct.

The vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.3:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.3(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Brookridge Drive in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. The vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.4:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.4(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Araz Place in the city of North York a historic North York street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.5:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.5(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Arboretum Lane in the city of North York a historic North York street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour of the motion will please say “aye.” All those opposed will please say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

You have to be in your seats. Don't forget.

Liberal motion, 29.6:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.6(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Archway Crescent in the city of North York a historic North York street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Hon David Johnson: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: In line with the procedure during a previous block of amendments whereby the only different portion of the amendment was a street name — and we're facing a similar situation with these motions, about 1,500 motions — I would ask for unanimous consent of the House that in fact you be authorized, I guess, if that's the right word, to use the same procedure during this block as was used during that previous block and simply bring to the attention of the members the different name of each street.

The Chair: Is there unanimous consent — would you like to speak on it?

Ms Castrilli: Yes.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Yes, I will begin by saying one part of it and the member for Downsview has an intervention. The government seems to be early in its intervention in this regard. This time round the government House leader has listened to perhaps one or two of these amendments and has drawn a conclusion rather quickly, Mr Chair. Our view is that it would be somewhat early to draw any such conclusion. However, I will defer to my colleague from Downsview.

The Chair: It's not necessary to debate. I've asked for unanimous consent and I'll ask the question again: Is there unanimous consent? There's not.

Liberal motion, 29.7:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.7(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan

Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Ardrea Drive in the city of North York a historic North York street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour of the motion will please say “aye.” All those opposed will please say “nay.”

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): On a point of order, Mr Chairman: Pursuant to the unanimous consent around deferral, the member for Algoma is gone and we would like to make that record clear so that we're able to proceed with the deferral.

The Chair: All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it.

The member for Cochrane South, I agree with what you said, but you have to remain in your seat, seated. Are you one of the members of the NDP? You're not. Who are the members of the NDP?

Mr Colle: Five.

The Chair: There have to be five.

Mr Gilles Pouliot (Lake Nipigon): They're not sure. But we're members of the NDP.

The Chair: No, but I want to know who are the ones who have been told to remain in their seats in order that we take the deferred vote.

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): I am.

The Chair: You are. Who else? Two. How many Liberals are there?

Mr Colle: Three.

The Chair: So you are the three appointed. So whenever there is a change —

Interjections.

The Chair: It's five altogether. Just take your seat for a minute. Let me repeat, that if you make changes I see the ones who are responsible — you left the chair — so that we know for sure that when we look at the individuals who have been appointed, we know they are there in their seats. 1330

Mr Len Wood: On a point of order, Mr Chair: For the next while, I will be the designated voter for the NDP caucus, and I assume the Liberals will have four members voting with me.

The Chair: So it will be the member for Lake Nipigon, yourself, and the three Liberals there.

Mr Len Wood: The member for Lake Nipigon might have to go because he's on a finance committee very soon in another room.

The Chair: And Mr Conway, so therefore we have five. That's fine.

The vote is deferred.

The Acting Chair (Mr Jack Carroll): Okay, we're ready to go.

Liberal motion, section 29.8:

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Hon David Johnson: On a point of order, Mr Chair: In dealing with a previous block of amendments, the Speaker ruled in that case that — they were very similar. There was an amendment where it was word for word — some 8,000 of them — precisely the same, except that what had been inserted in one line was either a street name or a lake or an inn or an island or something of that nature in the province of Ontario. After consideration, the Speaker directed that instead of reading the whole motion, the Chair should simply read the street name.

He did this after a part of the process had unfolded for a certain period of time and then he ruled that it was appropriate at that point in time that the Chair simply read the street name.

I notice that we have been into this process, which is very equivalent, where you are doing your diligent best, doing an excellent job at reading an amendment with similar characteristics. In other words, there's one amendment and the significant difference here is a different street name.

Mr Chair, I believe from the previous ruling of the Speaker, and in assistance to you, that you have the latitude at this point, since we have gone through about an hour of this particular Liberal amendment — and there are some 1,500 in total of them — entirely similar, with the significant difference being the street name.

I believe you have the latitude at this point to go exactly the same route. The members will now be totally aware of what the amendment is and the Liberal Party members, I'm sure, will because it's their amendment, so they'll know it. The NDP members, I'm sure, have studied this thoroughly and they'll know precisely what it is. I can speak on behalf of all the government members: We understand this Liberal amendment from front to back with the only difference being the street name.

I would ask you to rule at this point that you can proceed and in fact do proceed on the same basis and simply read the street name.

The Acting Chair: Minister, that is a point of order. Did you have something on the same point of order?

Ms Castrilli: I have something on the same point of order, Chair.

The Acting Chair: I was prepared to rule on it.

Ms Castrilli: You were prepared to rule on it?

The Acting Chair: Yes, I was.

Ms Castrilli: Perhaps I could just beg a little bit of your time before you do that, Chair. I'd like to offer the view that this differs from the previous NDP amendments and the ruling that was rendered at that time.

I urge you to look at the motion and you'll see first off that this isn't just a question of putting in one street name in a motion. We are in fact talking about putting in a street name, putting in a city, defining that street. Secondly, if it's a street in the city of Toronto, it requires the naming of the City of Toronto Act, where applicable. I think that in itself makes it distinguishable.

I also advanced arguments to the Speaker earlier that these amendments are really quite different from the ones that we've seen previously. This isn't the question of every single street in Metropolitan Toronto. There are only —

Interjections.

The Acting Chair: Order.

Ms Castrilli: I wonder if I could have leave to speak.

The Acting Chair: Order.

Ms Castrilli: There are only 1,400 streets that have been designated, and again, as I said to the Speaker, it was in response to what we heard in the hearings and what people have said to us through the referendum. They're very careful. It's a very careful selection of streets and they're there for specific purposes.

Could I also point out to you that the Speaker's ruling on the NDP motion — I forget what day it was; we've been at this a fairly long time — specifically said, and I will quote to you: “Let me be very clear. This process will be applied to this series of amendments only and should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future.” Therefore, the government House leader cannot argue that you should use that precedent to bolster his view.

Finally, let me say to you that it would be very, very difficult to simply read out sections of each motion. It would be extremely confusing. It would not be time effective at all. I think we would be requiring clarification at each stage and there is no precedent that has been set in this House to date and I urge to rule that out of order.

The Acting Chair: The member for Beaches-Woodbine. On the same point of order?

Ms Lankin: Yes, on the same point of order. I would like to point out a number of things which I think distinguish this from the Speaker's ruling with respect to the series of NDP motions. First of all, I'd like to talk about the amount of time that has been involved.

The Speaker's ruling came some time late Sunday afternoon, some four full days after we had commenced the process and about 2,500 to 2,800 or so amendments into the series of some 10,000 or so NDP amendments that dealt with substantially the same subject matter. More specifically, I would like to point out to you that we have been at this approximately one hour now and that in total there are only some 1,400 Liberal amendments. It comes nowhere near the threshold that had been reached when Speaker Stockwell made his earlier ruling.

But I think it is also important that you take into account Speaker Stockwell's ruling at the time. I'm reading from a text of that in which he spends some time setting out the procedure with respect to the reading of amendments in committee of the whole and finds in fact that it is the practice and it is in order and it should be followed that the amendments are read in and gives for the reason that "the fundamental parliamentary principle behind this procedure is that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on."

In talking about that, he then goes on to set out, though, that in some circumstances, extraordinary and unusual circumstances, there is a precedent which says that the Speaker does have a latitude to act in exceptional instances and he finds that this House is in an exceptional circumstance and goes on to make a ruling in which he is very, very careful to set out that he is proposing to do two things.

First of all is that he would, for the balance of those NDP amendments, make a copy of the amendment available to members of the Legislative Assembly and that the Chair would be required to read the street name in only before putting the question on each amendment.

He says, and I'm quoting now directly: "Let me be very clear. This process will be applied to this series of amendments only and should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future. This does not mean that I'm finding these amendments to be frivolous or tendered in a spirit of mockery."

He then goes on to make two very direct suggestions, and I would think, coming from the Office of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, these are as close to directives to the members of the Legislative Assembly as is possible.

Second, he says he is making a strong recommendation to this House that it direct its energies and future to develop proposals that will address our legislative process with a view to adding to it report stage procedures which would go a long way to solving this kind of problem.

To date, there have been no discussions of what those proposals would be or how they'd be developed. I think that's understandable given the circumstance we're in and that this will be something that I'm sure House leaders will turn their minds to in the future.

Secondly, he points out that "members should understand that this decision will only shorten this process up to a point," and that "we are still going to be here for an extended period of time."

He says, "In closing, I implore the House leaders to begin the process of negotiating an agreement that will resolve this impasse for the benefit of the members, the employees, the citizens of this province and this great institution."

Mr Chair, I would suggest to you that this extraordinary ruling of the Chair in which he acts with latitude in exceptional circumstances, given the directions that he has placed in this ruling, was in fact to attempt to put pressure on all parties in this Legislative Assembly to find some resolve to this impasse.

I would point out to you that subsequent to that, House leaders meetings have been held, that there in fact have been some discussions and, as recently as media reports today, the government House leader has indicated that it is helpful and that there is a process and that this is ongoing.

I think it would be highly unusual now, given that the conditions seem to have been created by the Speaker's ruling for potentially productive discussions to take place, for a Chair now at this point to create a different precedent with respect to the normal procedures of this House and upset that balance that has been created by what was an extraordinary but, I would argue, helpful ruling of the Speaker at that point in time.

The Acting Chair: I'm prepared to answer this and you can deal with my answer as you see fit. Basically, as I understand the rules of this place, those who are proposing amendments have the right that they be read. The Speaker made a ruling, and I have a copy of it here, which very specifically ruled on NDP amendment 24(4). I believe that confines me to not having the latitude to make that same decision in this particular case. In the absence of unanimous consent, I have to rule against the request to defer the reading of the amendments.

Hon David Johnson: Mr Chair, I respect your decision, but I do challenge the Chair.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the Speaker.

The Acting Chair: Mr Speaker, we'd been through 121 of a series of amendments proposed by the Liberal Party on section 29.1 of the bill that are different only if they have a different street name inserted in them. The government House leader requested that I rule, consistent with your ruling from subsection 24(4), that we be allowed to just name the street rather than repeat the whole motion. I told him that I wasn't at liberty to make that particular ruling and he appealed that decision of mine and we've asked you to come in and settle the issue for us.

Hon David Johnson: Yes, Mr Speaker, I have appealed that. There was a similar situation, which I suspect you may recall vaguely, a few days ago. This is a little bit like Alice in Wonderland. It certainly is a strange, strange world. On that occasion there were some 8,000 amendments which incorporated another street or another island or another inn or another stadium or another something. Browning Island was in there, I think —

The Speaker: Not that I don't appreciate this, but let's try and stick to the issue and deal with it.

Hon David Johnson: In that case, you then required, and I'm reading from your ruling, that "the Chair...be required to read the street name prior to putting the question on each amendment," which was a process at that time that certainly to my sense — I do recall talking to members of all three parties and they said that was a very sensible ruling on your part. It proceeded, and I believe at that time there was the feeling of this whole House that it allowed the members to understand what they were voting on, but at the same time that the House could do its business in an expeditious and efficient fashion.

You also indicated that it wasn't a precedent, and I'll state that right up front. I'm aware of that; I know that's going to be stated. Nevertheless I will say that the situation we face at the present time is quite identical. I think part of your ruling may have been that we had gone through a considerable number of those. I don't know the percentage by comparison to the percentage we've gone through of the Liberal amendments at this point in time.

As the Chair of the committee of the whole has indicated, we've gone through some 120 of these particular amendments which are substantially identical, almost word for word. To be totally precise, the difference is that most of them refer to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, I think, and some of them maybe the City of Toronto Act or something of that nature, the street name again and a reference to a municipality. Other than that they're word for word precisely the same.

Based on what I think you felt was important to this House, which was that the members understand what they're voting on, I'm fully confident that all the members of this House understand this motion now, having seen it 120 times. Perhaps they could be provided, as you suggested in the previous case, with a blank copy with the pertinent parts not filled in if that would assist in their further understanding.

At the same time, you also put a strong recommendation to the House that it direct its energies in future to develop proposals that will address our legislative process, with a view to adding to it a report which states procedures which would go a long way to solving this kind of problem — another excellent recommendation on your part, one that I certainly, on behalf of the government, would fully intend to pursue. But obviously, Mr Speaker, you would realize that between last weekend and now there's been no opportunity to do this, and we find ourselves still in this laborious, time-consuming procedure. But rest assured that I would wish to pursue this in the future.

Finally, you indicated that you would "implore the House leaders to begin the process of negotiating an agreement that will resolve this impasse for the benefit of the members, the employees, the citizens of this province and this...institution," which again was a recommendation I fully endorsed and one that I indicated to all concerned was an excellent recommendation. In fact, I had called a meeting of the House leaders prior to that, called a subsequent meeting, but unfortunately I have to report to you that while I put suggestions of more public hearing, more debate etc, we have made no progress —

The Speaker: You understand what I'm going to rule now. It's the point of order before us, if we could stick to that.

Hon David Johnson: I'm just following up on your full ruling last time.

The Speaker: Where my ruling is germane, I think it will be useful to hear.

Hon David Johnson: I do know that the members opposite raised these points in dealing with the Chair, because my suspicion is they'll do that again.

I believe that having gone through 120 of these, and perhaps with sending a blank copy around, as the members felt that your ruling last time was a good one, the same ruling should be made in this particular case. If it is your view that the Chair should refer to the act, the street and the city, then I think that would certainly be acceptable. Those are the only three aspects that change. The reality is, simply by referring to the street, everybody here would without a doubt know what we are referring to, but just to be fully sure, the Chair could refer to the act, the street and the city, and then there would be no doubt whatsoever.

Mr Speaker, I would ask you again, in the interests of allowing the members to understand, but in the interests of efficiency of this House, to direct the Chair accordingly.

Ms Castrilli: Mr Speaker, in responding to the point of order raised by the government House leader, I'll make three points: I'll address the differences between the amendment before us and the series of amendments that will come and those of the NDP previously; I'll address the issue of the consequences of accepting the point of order as stated by the government House leader; and I'll deal with the precedents to date.

Let me first say that our amendments, and this particular amendment, are quite dramatically different from the ones we have seen to date and on which you have ruled previously. You will recall that there were over 11,000 of the NDP amendments which were the subject of your ruling. We have presented but 1,400 amendments. I made representation to you earlier that they were selectively chosen to reflect what we had heard at hearings on the legislation. It was a selection that is before you. It is not every street in greater Metropolitan Toronto. That in itself is a large difference.

The second difference I would point out to you is that our amendment is structured differently. If you have the amendment before you, you will see that it requires us to insert the name of the street, it requires the municipality, it requires the municipality as the definition of the street, and where it is in the city of Toronto it also requires reference to the City of Toronto Act. Those are three or four insertions that need to be made, whereas the NDP amendments on which you ruled required only one. The consequences of acceding to the government House leader's request is that it would be extremely confusing for this House to deal with the number of changes that are required with each amendment. Frankly, I would expect that what would happen is that members would be forever asking questions as to where we are and what precisely is being voted on. I don't think that is either desirable or time-effective.

Dealing with the precedents briefly, there are no precedents for this. Certainly our standing orders are silent on any of these issues. The legislative interpretation of those, the precedents are silent on this. The only authority that speaks to the point at all is Beauchesne. I refer you to the sixth edition, section 3237, which says:

"The Speaker or the Chairman of a committee of the whole ought not to consider the consequences of the adoption or rejection of a motion or an amendment, nor is it their concern whether ministers of the crown or private members are proceeding fast enough with their bills or motions. All the Speaker has to do is to see that the rules of procedure are observed. The House will decide what course to follow after the members who sponsor measures have introduced and explained them."

This is not a debate on the amendment. The government will be free to defeat the amendment if they wish. It is your concern simply to make sure the procedures of the House are followed.

Dealing with your previous ruling, which is not a precedent — you've said that very clearly and I want to reiterate that — at the time of the ruling some 2,000 NDP amendments had already gone through and we had been through several days of dealing with those amendments. We have barely started, and as I've said, there are only 4,400 of our amendments in total. Your ruling, however, does not stand as a precedent because you've said very clearly, "Let me be...clear. This process will be applied to this series of amendments only and should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future." Therefore, your own ruling cannot be used, although you are perfectly free to consider making a decision on this set of the evidence that's put before you. But that does not constitute a precedent, by your own words.

Let me say in conclusion that our amendment is both qualitatively and quantitatively different from what was before you in the point of order dealing with the NDP series of amendments. It would not be either time-effective or desirable to proceed in the manner suggested by the government House leader. Your ruling is not a precedent. There is clear evidence that the speed at which we are proceeding is not the concern of the Speaker in general.

Finally, I'd like to quote your ruling, however, in this, and I think it is germane: "Every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on.... I believe that a modern definition of Speaker requires that decisions are taken which are also in the best interests of the institution of Parliament," and only in extraordinary circumstances should that be deviated from."

I submit to you that these are not extraordinary circumstances, that in fact we are proceeding at a clip that allows us to know what we are voting on and it is in the best interests of the institution of Parliament to rule against this point of order.

Ms Lankin: Mr Speaker, you've heard arguments with respect to the quantitative and qualitative differences and I'm not going to argue on those points. They are there for you to consider. I want to deal solely with your previous ruling.

The first stage of your ruling, which reviews the precedents in this House, comes down to a basic finding that the Chair was absolutely correct in his ruling. Our practice and procedures require the amendments to be read. That is no longer in dispute with respect to this exercise in the committee of the whole. That has been decided by you on the basis of precedents in this Legislature.

You then go on to find that in extraordinary circumstances, exceptional circumstances, the Speaker does have latitude to act and you state that you believe the House finds itself in exceptional circumstances and you provide a ruling which we know was with respect to the series of NDP amendments to subsection 24(4). You couldn't have been clearer in your ruling than to say, "This process will be applied to this series of amendments only and should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future." You go on to urge that the assembly take steps in the future to deal with this particular kind of problem through the rules.

I would submit to you if you were to rule again in this light and to create a second ruling which varied from the practice and procedures of this House that require the amendments to be read, you would in fact be creating precedence at that point in time and rule changes would not be required in order to facilitate resolving these kinds of problems in the future.

More importantly I believe, and this is the reason I was struck by your ruling and why I found your ruling to be one of balance under the circumstances, in closing you "implore the House leaders to begin the process of negotiating an agreement that will resolve this impasse for the benefit of the members, the employees, the citizens of this province and this institution."

This impasse exists with respect to the procedure that we are undertaking now in dealing with amendments in committee of the whole. I believe, and of course this is in your mind to know, but I believe that you sought to create pressure on the parties of this Legislative Assembly to try and find a way through that impasse. I believe, as a facilitator of the Legislative Assembly and of parliamentary procedure, and as someone who sits as a neutral, it was wise to try to create the conditions under which the parties might themselves find a resolve to the impasse. As you know and as you have ruled, it is not within your purview to be able to find that resolve for us; it is only for you to try and seek to create the conditions that that resolve might be found.

I submit to you that, while wise in that circumstance, the opportunities for those negotiations have existed and continue to exist. It would not be wise for you to insert yourself in the process again and to change the balance that you have created, which is to put pressure on all sides of this Legislative Assembly, by at this point in time attempting to, I would say, facilitate the government's desire to shorten the process that is before us.

I believe it is a critical ruling for you, at this point not to create a precedent in this House that stands outside the rules of the Legislature and, secondly, not to intervene and step into what has clearly been recognized by all as a dispute of the parties and attempt in any way to influence what is a very precarious balance that has been struck, which has facilitated the commencement of discussions, although as the government House leader quite rightly points out, no resolve has been found yet.

Mr Gerretsen: I'm certainly not going to repeat anything that has been said here so far, Mr Speaker.

As the interim Chair has clearly pointed out, he had dealt with 120 of these amendments in a matter of about one hour. This whole process, at that length of time, would take no more than 10 or 11 hours.

Interjections.

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa-Rideau): It's only $10,000 an hour. What's $100,000 or so to you?

Mr Gerretsen: Just for the record, this is not costing $10,000 an hour. That was an interjection that was made.

The Speaker: Let me just get this straight. Member for Ottawa-Rideau, come to order, please. Thank you. I don't want to get into that debate. I'm not here to hear those arguments. I understand that there was barracking that you're responding to. I would ask that the barracking discontinue.

Mr Gerretsen: The point I am trying to make, Mr Speaker, is that the whole process here would have taken a fairly short period of time. In the last hour or so, in which the ruling of the interim Chair has been challenged, we could have dealt with at least another 100 or so of the various amendments. This can be dealt with in a timely fashion, certainly when you look at it in regard to the amount of time we have already spent here. Another 10 hours or so to make sure we go through each one of these amendments — and I might say that these lists are not computer-generated. They are handwritten. They have been studied on an individual, street-by-street basis.

Even if you were to shorten the process whereby, let's say, the street name and the municipality were to be referred to, the amount of time that's going to be saved by that is going to be negligible compared to the amount of time it takes to read the entire half-page resolution or motion.

Hon David Johnson: Just quickly, it shows the kind of weird world we have descended into where the member opposite indicates it would only take 10 or 11 hours for this particular set. My reckoning is, the way things are going to work out, it actually would take considerably longer. But I wonder how many other committees of the whole have gone through 10 or 11 hours of this sort of stacking of the votes in the history of the province of Ontario.

In terms of extraordinary circumstances, I am informed that we have now passed the 140-hour mark. We have occupied time in each day of the last week and still we have, as we all know and as you have pointed out in your ruling, a long, long way to go just yet. So if these aren't extraordinary circumstances, I don't know: day and day and day after day of stalling. As has been indicated, it costs a quarter of a million dollars every day we come into this Legislature —

The Speaker: Order. Government House leader, I think I was fairly clear that I didn't want to go there. If you want to finish your submission, I'd appreciate it.

Mr Gerretsen: Where do you get those numbers?

Hon David Johnson: Just from the facts.

These are extraordinary circumstances, Mr Speaker. I think there's a danger to look at each block in isolation and say, "Well, that one will only take 15 hours, and that one will only take 10 hours, and that block will only take 10 days." But if we look at the whole thing together, never in the history of this House have we been faced with a situation like this. Indeed, this is unique. It is extraordinary. As the whip of the third party has indicated, we have negotiated, we have put forward a proposal, but the third party in particular has indicated it's not interested in negotiating unless the bill is killed, and we're not about to do that.

Interjections.

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): Point of order.

The Speaker: Order. I will tell members now I'm going to name someone if I don't get order. Thank you.

The submissions, I assume, are done. I appreciate, the leader of the third party — I am not here to hear points of order on anything but what's before me.

Mr Hampton: It's on this.

The Speaker: It's on this? Well, then, go ahead.

Mr Hampton: I want to read just briefly from Beauchesne. It's the opening part in Beauchesne on "Principles of Parliamentary Law." You will not find anything the government House leader mentioned in these opening principles. This is what he says:

"The principles of Canadian parliamentary law are:

"To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every member to express opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time;" — so time is mentioned, but I ask you to note that time is mentioned with the following — "to give abundant opportunity" — abundant opportunity — "for the consideration of every measure and to prevent any legislative action from being taken upon sudden impulse."

So there are about six principles there. Time is one of six. Nowhere does the government House leader's fascination with his imaginary numbers appear. I want you to note that.

Speaker, I would also like you to note this. The government says: "Well, just dispense. Dispense with the substance of these amendments." The fact is that how we do legislation and who is interested in legislation has changed a great deal from the days when a few legislators met and the public either did not have the means or was not interested in what was happening. Now the public has the means to watch. People all across this city, people all across this province, have the means to watch and to listen to what is happening. They have the means to in some way watch democracy and they have the means, if they care to, to try to understand what's happening here. But what the government wants to do is they basically want to take the meat off these amendments so that anyone watching at home, so that anyone who visits here, someone who might have a very clear interest in this because they live where this would take effect — the government wants to cut the situation such that they can't —

The Speaker: I appreciate the leader of the third party's input, but I really would like you to speak to the point of order, and the point of order is dealing with this amendment in this House for these members.

Mr Hampton: Yes, I understand that. My point is that you are in effect the protector of democracy. It's your role to not only uphold the rules of this House, but to ensure that the minority are protected, to ensure that we don't give way to tyranny of a majority, to secure the transaction of public business, yes, in an orderly manner, to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse.

My point is simply this: If you read those principles — and I would point out again that nothing the government House said has anything to do with these principles — and apply them to the issue which is at hand here and you take into consideration that people all across this province ought to be able to tell from the process we are following what we mean, what we are voting on, what we are doing, what the results will be, if you apply those principles to this situation at hand, I think you can only rule as the opposition is asking you to rule. I think you can come to no other conclusion, Speaker. That's my point.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr Guzzo: They started it.

The Speaker: I don't really care who started it; it's out of order. I'm going to take an hour to review this.

apologize to the members for the recesses. They are long, I understand that, but as time wears on I think I'm thinking slower, so it's going to take me longer.

Mr Hampton: — when this is over, I want to ask the Speaker a question, if it's in order. I'd like you to consider some —

The Speaker: Well, you know what? It's just not in order. I'm sorry.

The House recessed from 1528 to 1628.

The Speaker: Let me begin by saying that I, as much as anyone here, would welcome a vehicle by which this process could be expedited. We are here in the midst of a procedural impasse of logarithmic proportions. We are faced with an impossible task but one which falls within the bounds of our procedures.

But I want to be very clear to all members of this House: I cannot and will not by virtue of my rulings on this issue in this very difficult circumstance create a precedent that will impose a future solution that is more properly decided by this House.

In addition, even if I were to entertain the idea of making such rulings, it could not be done with respect to this particular issue. The amendments before us now have variable wording, unlike the proposed NDP amendments to 24(4) which involved a street insertion only. In my view, the margin for error increases exponentially and the chance of confusion is greater. The principle that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on must guide me in these circumstances.

I therefore uphold the Chair's ruling and add that he was absolutely correct in his interpretation of my previous decision on the matter.

Mr Wildman: Point of privilege.

The Speaker: No points of privilege, sir.

Mr Wildman: I just wanted to apologize —

The Speaker: It's not in order but I heard you. Thank you.

House in committee of the whole.

The First Deputy Chair: Order. Before we begin, may I remind the opposition members, before we start, in terms of the deferred vote to let me know how many members in each caucus for the time being. Of course, whenever that changes you should let the Chair know. Do you have a point of order?

Mr Michael Brown: I was just going to inform you how many members we had.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr Michael Brown: We have three members, Madam Chair.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay. I see four, but if you say three —

Mrs Boyd: Point of order: We will be two; I know you see three but that's only temporary.

The First Deputy Chair: Thank you for letting me know.

Liberal motion, 29.122:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

""Preserving local heritage

""29.122(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): Mr Speaker, on a point of order: One of the reasons I came down to relieve one of our members here so that he could have dinner as well. Mr Speaker, we've had a number of calls in our office wanting to know what that loud noise is that they keep hearing on the parliamentary channel. The people wanted to know was there something wrong with their television, was there something wrong with their cable?

The Acting Chair: That's not a point of order.

Mr Gerretsen: You shouldn't shout and yell that much, Mr Speaker.

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa-Rideau): They don't know how Crozier missed that call.

Mr Mario Sergio (Yorkview): Point of order: With all due respect, that was not necessary, the point about Mr Crozier. It's not a point of order and I would like to have a ruling of the Chair.

Liberal motion, 29.307:

"I move that the bill will be amended by adding the following section:

""Preserving local heritage

""29.307(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating a crescent in the city of Scarborough a historic Scarborough street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

""(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour will say "aye." All those opposed will say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it. The vote will be deferred.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener): Point of order.

The Acting Chair: The member for Kitchener on a point of order.

Mr Wettlaufer: Mr Chair, I realize that this is a rather different point of order, but there is a box down on the table here and I know that it would block your view of the member for Hamilton West. I think it would be best if that box wasn't there.

The Acting Chair: The box of amendments? Is that what you're referring to?

Mr Wettlaufer: That's the one that has been ruled should be kept on the chair in the past by previous Chairs.

The Acting Chair: Well, it's a desk. I don't understand. Why would it be required to be not on the top?

Mr Wettlaufer: Mr Chair, it has been ruled by other chairs sitting in your chair that that box should not be on the table, that it should be down below.

The Acting Chair: I can't see anything out of order by having a box of amendments on a desk.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): It's my box and I want it. Don't take my box.

Mr Wettlaufer: Is it a point of order or not, Mr Chair?

The Acting Chair: As far as I can determine, that's not a point of order.

The member for Mississauga South.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): Chair, the member for Welland-Thorold is saying, "It's my box and it's here," but in fact, the member for Welland-Thorold is not sitting in his seat. I think there is a requirement for the member for Hamilton West to be able to see the Chair in order that she can record what is going on in a vote accordingly. So in fairness to the member for Hamilton West, she does have to be able to see the table and at this point she can't.

Mr Gerretsen: Mr Chair?

The Acting Chair: On the same point of order?

Mr Gerretsen: On the same point of order. I totally concur with the member for Kitchener. I think that the member for Hamilton West should get every opportunity to watch the antics that are taking place across the floor by the three members who are shouting into the microphone at every opportunity they get. So I think the box ought to be removed so that she can witness some of her colleagues in action.

The Acting Chair: None of these, I believe, are points of order. As a courtesy, I think perhaps the box could be moved. I'm sure the member didn't understand it was obstructing other members' views. However —

Mrs Lillian Ross (Hamilton West): Mr Chair, I just want to thank everybody for their concern over my well-being so that I could see you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. I think, however, we're here to do amendments, and if we can do that, I'm going to start again.

"29.563(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bastedo Avenue," b-a-s-t-e-d-o, "in the city of Toronto incorporated by the City of Toronto Act, 1834 a historic Toronto street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

Drumbeats were heard.

Mr Baird: Make them go away, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: It's not within my power, member from Nepean, not in your seat.

Mr Baird: If I had a drum, it would sure be in your power.

The Acting Chair: Yes. If you had a drum, you would be in my power.

A Liberal amendment to section 29 of the act:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.564(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Batavia," b-a-t-a-v-i-a, "in the city of Toronto incorporated by the City of Toronto Act, 1834 a historic Toronto street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Is it the pleasure of the House that the amendment carry? All those in favour, please say "aye." All those against, please say "nay." In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Mr Baird: Up, up, up. Get up.

The Acting Chair: The vote shall be deferred.

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): On a point of order: These members are not in their places.

The Acting Chair: This is true.

Interjections.

Mr Hampton: They're all deemed standing up. Thank you, guys.

The Acting Chair: But you were not your usual vigorous self. In any case, we are going to have a deferred vote on this motion.

Hon Noble Villeneuve (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs): Madam Chair, on a point of order: We have special rules for the opposition. We have attempted to accommodate them every way we could. Do these rules not apply to us?

The Acting Chair: Well, you don't have to stand very often, Minister. I think the issue —

Hon Mr Villeneuve: The rule should apply to us.

The Acting Chair: I think it was just one of those issues where you didn't speak up as loudly as you had; really a wake-up call, if I may say so. I think, with the agreement of the House, it can certainly apply to all sides of the House.

Mr Sergio: Point of order, Chair:

I do believe that it applies to both sides of the House in order for the vote to be valid.

The Acting Chair: Then my apologies.

Mr Sergio: Now, if they wish to contest the ruling, I also would say, Madam Chair, that once you call for the vote, you should move on and say it carries or it doesn't carry or it's deferred, nothing else. One or two seconds had elapsed until you told the people to get up and say no. Now, if they wish to contest our position, they have to say no or whatever. I don't think we should help them in any way. If their vote is to be counted, then they should be in their chair.

The Acting Chair: Member for Yorkview, they did say "nay."

Mr Sergio: I don't believe that they should be given a second chance, Madam Chair, with all due respect to you.

The Acting Chair: Excuse me, but we all have, under the rules of the House, when someone says one side has it, there is the opportunity for the vote to be deferred.

Interjections: Point of order.

The Acting Chair: We'll take you in order. The member for York South.

Mr Gerard Kennedy (York South): Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that I would agree with my colleague from Yorkview that now that the amendments are finding favour with the House and that there are more people saying "aye" than "nay," I think it should apply that the provisions would be there. So if more votes are lost, then I think the government side should be allowed to have the same privilege, and we would support that.

The Acting Chair: In fact, member from York South, I would agree with that. There were certainly five members who are in their seats, although there are a lot of members who aren't in their seats, and I think, in the spirit of what we were trying to accomplish with the motion that came from the Minister of Energy in the middle of the night, as I recall, to try and keep us all going with a very long session, I would agree with you.

So my ruling would be, then, that from now on the rules apply equally, but it means that people must be in their seats. The same rules for both sides: At least five people need to be in their seats.

Interjection.

The Acting Chair: That's fine, member for Durham Centre. Anyway, let's carry on. But I think it is a bit of a wake-up call to people if they feel strongly against these amendments, as well.

Mr Wettlaufer: Point of order.

The Acting Chair: The member for Kitchener.

Mr Wettlaufer: I just want to point out for the record that there were nine of us in our seats.

The Acting Chair: I'm glad that there are. I do want to confirm we did the motion around members being in their seats and counting.

Interjections.

The Acting Chair: Order, member for Rainy River. Member for S-D-G.

Hon Mr Villeneuve: Is calling a colleague "stupid" parliamentary?

The Acting Chair: Who did?

Hon Mr Villeneuve: The leader of the third party just did it.

Interjection: He did not.

Mr Kennedy: Madam Speaker, I don't think it is parliamentary to impute motives, and I can assure you, as someone sitting closer to the member referred to, that was not part of the conversation. I think it should be withdrawn to be in keeping with the parliamentary procedure in this House.

The Acting Chair: The member for Rainy River.

Mr Hampton: On a point of privilege, Madam Chair: I said that the Conservative members were asleep at the switch, which indeed they were, but at no time did I call anyone "stupid." But it is without doubt that you were asleep at the switch, just as you were the other day.

Mr Sergio: Are we saying then that the motion had carried?

The Acting Chair: No, we weren't saying that the motion had carried, member from Yorkview. In fact, what I said was that I heard more ayes, and there were members in their seats.

I want to confirm with the House we had unanimous consent that five members in their seats constituted a deferred vote for the opposition. At that point it wasn't specifically stated that the same right belonged to the government party, but I'm sure that was the intention. Can I have a confirmation that we have all-party consent that it applies to all sides of the House?

Interjections: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Agreed? Member from Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I was here last evening when we had the unanimous consent, and one of the requirements for meeting that consent was for each of the three parties in the Legislature to indicate to the Chair prior to invoking this provision how many people they had actually in their seats, so that the Chair was not in a position of trying to ascertain that.

The Acting Chair: That's quite true, member for Algoma-Manitoulin. That was the agreement, and I assume that if we are agreeing we have all-party consent, we would be doing the same thing with the government party. So whoever is the acting whip might want to tell me who is in their seats and give me a number, and if that changes, member for Kitchener—I understand that you're the acting whip tonight—I wonder if you would stand in your place and say that there's a change in the numbers of your members who are in their seats and so count for this consent.

Mr Wettlaufer: Madam Chair, I'd be happy to. Right now we have nine in our seats, and if there's a change I will be happy to let you know.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. Shall we go on? Okay.

A Liberal amendment to section 29 of the act:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.565(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bathurst Avenue in the city of Toronto incorporated by the City of Toronto Act, 1834 a historic Toronto street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Is it the pleasure of the House that this amendment carry?

Interjections: Aye.

Mr Baird: We don't want there to be any doubt.

The Acting Chair: There wasn't. All those in favour please say "aye." All those against, please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote will be deferred.

Mr Kennedy: You may or may not think this is a point of order, Madam Chair, but I'd like to congratulate the whip opposite for now bringing the ranks into line.

The Acting Chair: It is not a point of order, and in fact may be somewhat provocative, member for York South. Let's go on and see if we can accomplish some more of these.

Member for Sudbury East, would you report to the House on the number of NDP members in the House please?

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): Thank you Madam Chair: One.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Interjections:

The Acting Chair: Order.

Mr Crozier: You're doing very well, Chair. I think some of these names were handwritten while they were riding along in a gravel truck.

The Second Deputy Chair: You're going to have to help me. I think it's the rule that when the numbers I'm counting change, before you sit down you have to let me know. Is somebody going to let me know, or am I going to have to defeat these?

Mr Crozier: Well, this one moved, so there's one, two, three, four, five.

The Second Deputy Chair: Is that the way the notice has been given?

Mr Crozier: I don't know.

Mr John L. Parker (York East): Two NDP and three Liberals.

The Second Deputy Chair: Oh, is that what it is?

Mr Parker: Yes, and a representative from each party is to be responsible for their respective party.

The Second Deputy Chair: But how is the table notified?

Mr Parker: By standing up and making an announcement whenever there's a change.

The Second Deputy Chair: Would somebody stand up and make the announcement, and then we can do it properly?

Mr Crozier: There are two NDP and three Liberal, one out of his place.

The Second Deputy Chair: Thank you. I just want to make sure it's done right. I haven't been here during this process before.

I'm just checking to make sure, because of the unanimous consent, if there are changes in numbers. Perhaps there haven't been; I'm not sure. Can the New Democrats say how many are sitting?

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): I understand that voting is four plus myself, which is five.

The First Deputy Chair: So there is one for the New Democratic Party.

Mr Len Wood: At this point in time. It probably won't be for very long.

The First Deputy Chair: Yes, I know the shifts change.

Mr Len Wood: There are five members present.

The First Deputy Chair: I realize that, but I want to be clear. Under the unanimous consent, if not a person but the numbers change for each party, I'm supposed to be told.

Mr Len Wood: I was supposed to do that earlier and it slipped my mind. Sorry, Chair.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay, thank you. So it's four for the Liberals.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): Point of order, Chair.

The Acting Chair: Certainly, member from — point of order.

Mr Kormos: Welland-Thorold, the heart of the Niagara Peninsula.

Chair, I've been out of the House for a few hours and I appreciate the hard work that the Chairs are doing. However, it's still required that business be conducted in either one of the two official languages of the House. I understand you're very audible. However, these are not NDP motions, these are Liberal motions, and I want to be able to vote on them one at a time and determine where my support goes. I would ask, therefore, that you please — and I understand what you're doing — slow down so that they're not only audible but comprehensible. I tell you, sir, I don't criticize you, but it's important that they be comprehensible, certainly to me.

The Acting Chair: They're all repetitive and I make very clear the name of the street. Everything else is repetitive and I make the street very clear.

Mr Kormos: Yes, I understand that, Chair, but they're not NDP motions. I wasn't a party to them.

The Acting Chair: Would you like a copy? Could we give you a copy that you could follow along?

Mr Kormos: If I could have copies of the motions. I want to make sure that the Liberals don't try to slide one through that perhaps deviates from one of the others even in some small way.

Mr Curling: On a point of order, Madam Chair: You’re doing an excellent job there, but with this confusion of the mess that the Tories are trying to clean up at the moment, I just wonder if we could pause for a moment until they get some of their mess cleaned up and then we could proceed. I could not hear you.

The First Deputy Chair: Do we have unanimous consent that we take a break? I heard a “no.”

Mr Gerretsen: On a point of order, Chair: Can the Chair confirm to me that that is Kurt Browning Avenue? Is it named after that famous skater, world champion many times over?

The First Deputy Chair: I would say this is out of order. I can only read what is before me.

Mr Gerretsen: But would the Chair happen to know whether that's named after Kurt Browning?

CITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1996 LOI DE 1996 SUR LA CITÉ DE TORONTO

Continuing consideration of Bill 103, An Act to replace the seven existing municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto by incorporating a new municipality to be known as the City of Toronto / Projet de loi 103, Loi visant à remplacer les sept administrations municipales existantes de la communauté urbaine de Toronto en constituant une nouvelle municipalité appelée la cité de Toronto.

The Chair (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Liberal motion, 29.1478:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1478(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Rosworth Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say "aye." All those opposed, say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.1479:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1479(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Belfield Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say "aye." All those opposed, say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Interjections.

The Chair: I like your sense of humour.

Liberal motion, 29.1480:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1480(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bournemouth Road in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke Street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say "aye." All those opposed, say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. I don't know if we have quorum because nobody told me who was replacing whom. I wonder if you could tell me that because otherwise the vote is going to be lost.

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): Absolutely, you're quite right. We now have five New Democrat members in their places.

The Chair: Who are they?

Mr Silipo: Are we required to tell you who they are?

The Chair: No, you don't have to.

Mr Silipo: No, we're not.

The Chair: But you do have five.

Mr Silipo: We do have five.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): I'm Peter Kormos from Welland-Thorold, Chair.

The Chair: And the vote is deferred. So you do have five and I trust your word.

Liberal motion, 29.1481:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"Preserving local heritage

"29.1481(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bowness Court in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

"(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail."

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say "aye." All those opposed, say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, section 29.1482:

"I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1482(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bowsprit Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, section 29.1483:

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): Point of order, Chair: I’d like to withdraw 1483, 1484, 1485 and 1486 because they had inappropriate addresses on them.

The Chair: And 1486 also?

Mr Crozier: Yes.

The Chair: Withdrawn.

Liberal motion, section 29.1487:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1487(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Boxbury Road in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, section 29.1488:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1488(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Boxwood Road in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, section 29.1489:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1489(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bradbrook Road in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it, and the vote is deferred.

Do you still have the same numbers, the same people?

Mrs Marion Boyd (London Centre): Yes.

The Chair: You have five people?

Ms Shelley Martel (Sudbury East): The same five as before.

Liberal motion, 29.1490:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1490(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained” —

Mr Frank Klees (York-Mackenzie): On a point of order, Mr Chair: I just wonder if it’s appropriate for us to be considering these amendments, which are Liberal amendments, in light of the fact that there’s no one from the Liberal Party represented here.

The Chair: That’s totally irrelevant because there are five people there. We saw this happening before when the NDP motions were introduced, where there were no New Democrats and only Liberals. It’s understood that it’s accepted that way.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): Mr Chair, on the point: As you’ve ruled, the time allocation motion deems that the amendments have been put, so we’re just following through the time allocation motion, and that’s the reason. As we often see, the question is now moot since the member for Kingston and The Islands has materialized.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): On a point of order, Mr Chair: For the record, I was in the House throughout this entire episode. I was conferring with some of my colleagues. We’re having a caucus meeting right now to determine what comes next. It’s been an accepted practice over the last seven days between the two caucuses — the NDP caucus and ours — that when they have meetings, the other caucus members would cover for the other party.

Interjections.

The Chair: Order. You also had your kick at the can. Everybody had a kick at the can, everybody should be happy and we will continue.

Liberal motion, 29.1490:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1490(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Braddock Road in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.1491:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1491(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Radfield in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.1492:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1492(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Radfield Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.1493:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1493(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Bidshaw Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.”

I just noticed that one of your members just left. Do you still have five?

Mrs Boyd: Peter, get back.

The Chair: “(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Liberal motion, 29.1494:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1494(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Braeburn Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” All those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): Mr Chair, on a point of order: We have one Liberal and five New Democrats present.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): You’re proud of that. It’s a good thing the NDP are supporting you.

Mr Miclash: We’re together on these things, David, once in a while.

The Chair: Order, the member for Kenora.

Interjection.

The Chair: Member for Kenora, there may be only four left.

Mr Wildman: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I’m about to leave, and there will be four New Democrats and two Liberals now. It’s really been enjoyable.

Interjections.

The Chair: When we have order, I will continue.

Liberal motion, 29.1495:

“I move that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

“Preserving local heritage

“29.1495(1) Despite anything else in this act, the heritage of the communities in the old municipalities that were area municipalities under the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act shall be preserved, and the character of each of those old municipalities sustained, by designating Braecrest Avenue in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street, and a heritage site of significance for the use of the residents of the urban area.

“(2) In the event of a conflict between this section and the provisions of any other legislation or regulation, this section shall prevail.”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say "aye." All those opposed, say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it and the vote is deferred.

Mr Silipo: On a point of order, Chair: I would just like to notify you that there will now be three New Democrats in their places and voting.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr Gerretsen: On a point of order, Mr Chair: First of all, we're glad to see you back. As I indicated to your immediate predecessor, when you were in the chair earlier we received a number of calls once again that the television audience cannot understand what you're saying. We would really appreciate it if you could slow it down a little so that we could make sure that everyone whose street we're trying to protect and whose neighbourhood and city we're trying to protect by taking this action will clearly understand when their particular street comes up.

Interjections.

The Second Deputy Chair: Order. I'll do absolutely the best that I can. I'm not perfect but I'll do the best I can. If you would like to provide some information for those people, you'll have their name and address, telephone number and so on, you could get a copy of this, send it. They could put it in front of them. They could follow along that way. That is not a point of order.

Mrs Boyd: On a point of order, Chair: There were five members seated. Why was the motion defeated?

The Second Deputy Chair: It's my understanding that when the numbers change — there were two NDP and three Liberals — when that changes, then I'm supposed to be notified. Pardon me, I'll just check.

Mrs Boyd: We had five in total.

The Second Deputy Chair: I'm supposed to be notified.

Mrs Boyd: Well, you're being notified now.

The Second Deputy Chair: That last point is not a point of order.

Mrs Boyd: Point of order, Mr Chair: According to the agreement, I'd like to inform you that there are three seated NDPs and two seated Liberals, making a total of five in the Legislature.

The Second Deputy Chair: Thanks very much. I left off after "29.1718."

Mr Colle: Point of order, Mr Chair.

The Second Deputy Chair: Did you want that before I took that vote?

Mr Colle: That was fine, no.

The Second Deputy Chair: The Chair recognizes the member for Oakwood on a point of order.

Mr Colle: Mr Chair, just to refresh my memory on your ruling, and that is, we had the discussion about the short form at the end of the street and we talked about parkway and we talked about square and that. I know you are now looking at avenue and road; you're not using the normal pronunciation of saying road, you're saying rd. I wonder, could you say “road” or “avenue”?

The Second Deputy Chair: I could, but this is quite a tedious task and I want to tell you that I make corrections only if we have unanimous consent or something like that. What I'm faced with is that I'm supposed to read this into the record and this is what is put in front of me. When I see d-r, I am pretty sure that that could be the short form for drive. I would know better if there was a period —

Hon Noble Villeneuve (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, minister responsible for francophone affairs): It could be “doctor.”

The Second Deputy Chair: Order — if there was a period after it. Then I would know it was an abbreviation. But for instance, if you want me to correct all this as I go through, I will. For instance, I have to read “in the city of Etobicoke a historic Etobicoke street,” and I would add the letter “n” to “a” to make it “an” preceding the “h” and read it “an historic,” the same as when I have breakfast I would have “an egg” instead of “a egg,” that sort of thing. If you want me to make corrections and do that, then we'll have unanimous consent and I'll do it to the best of my ability, but other than that, I've been instructed to read what is in front of me.

Mr Colle: We've been through this before. I'll leave it up to your own good judgement but I just made that request.

The Second Deputy Chair: No, I'm sorry, you can't do that. I can't use any judgement in this. I have to read exactly what's in front of me. But technically, I don't think that's a point of order.

Ms Castrilli: You're doing just fine, Chair.

The Second Deputy Chair: Thank you ever so much. The vote is deferred.

Mr Kormos: Point of order, Chair: Your colleague, Chair Johnson — not cher Johnson, Chair Johnson — is adamant that people notify him when they come or go from the chamber. I know when I’m coming or going; obviously Chair Johnson doesn’t. But I’m telling you now on a point of order that I am withdrawing from the chamber. There will be two New Democrats — Ms Boyd and Ms Martel — and it appears that there will continue to be three Liberals — Ms Castrilli, Mr Gerretsen and Mr Crozier — and I’ll let you know when I get back in.

The First Deputy Chair: Member for Welland-Thorold, I want to be clear about the unanimous consent the other night, in the middle of the night, whenever it was, that all you have to do when there’s a change in number is let me know. You don’t have to give names. I need to be informed if you go from three down to two or two up to three or whatever. That’s all you need to do. So now you’re going to be two New Democrats and three Liberals. Thank you.

Mr Kormos: Further to that point of order, Chair: Bert has a bird when we don’t notify him.

The First Deputy Chair: Member for Welland-Thorold, that’s not a point of order.

Interjections.

The First Deputy Chair: Order, please. The member for Downsview?

Interjections.

The First Deputy Chair: Order. I have a point of order here. I need to hear.

Ms Castrilli: Further to this point, I think it would be very helpful for members to know precisely when it is that we’re supposed to signify. According to Chair Johnson earlier, we would actually designate which of the three or two members on either side were there for the purposes of counting.

In other words, if we have three NDP members and three Liberals we were to signify to him which were the five who stood for the counting. That seems to me a little cumbersome and I wondered if you’d clarify that.

Mrs Boyd: On a point of order, Madam Chair: Further to that, the former Chair had a couple of motions lost because there were six of us sitting. So we are serious about this; this is not a frivolous point. We really need clarification of this.

The First Deputy Chair: I’ll seek clarification. It was my understanding that the Chair be kept informed of a change in the numbers, but I will try to clarify that.

I’m going to go with my interpretation of this.

Interjections.

The First Deputy Chair: Member for Kingston and The Islands, I’m ruling on this point of order.

I’m going to go with my interpretation of this and I just want to be informed when there is a change in the numbers.

Mr Gerretsen: Thank you very much for your interpretation.

Ms Castrilli: What does that mean?

The First Deputy Chair: What that means is that you must inform me when you have a change in the numbers. It’s as simple as that.

Ms Castrilli: We now have seven, so you want to be advised that there was seven of us or six, whatever it is.

The First Deputy Chair: Yes. Why don’t you inform me there’s a change. Just tell me how many numbers you have at the moment.

Ms Castrilli: It appears that we have, at the moment, five Liberals and two NDP.

Interjection: Six.

Ms Castrilli: Six. Sorry. It changes very quickly. It’s six Liberals and two NDP.

The First Deputy Chair: Just to come back to this point of order. Let’s get it really clear: I believe that there may be some reason why the former Chair was trying to designate who actually were here to vote because there may be some of you getting up and going.

Interjection: Leave Marilyn alone.

The First Deputy Chair: No. I really do want to clarify this because it can get really cumbersome and silly if we don't. I need to know which members are here designated to vote because otherwise it can be confusing if people are coming and going. You don't want to be up every five minutes saying, "We've now got six instead of seven." Is that —

Ms Castrilli: That's what I'm saying. This is the problem.

The First Deputy Chair: Let's try to just deal with it in a sensible way. That's my approach to it and we can continue on from here.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): Just the change of shift. Just punched in.

The First Deputy Chair: Right.

Mr Kormos: Point of order, Chair: In compliance with Chair Johnson’s ruling, I’m now advising you —

Mr John R. Baird (Nepean): Chair?

Mr Kormos: We also have Rosario Marchese from Fort York —

The First Deputy Chair: Member for Welland-Thorold, you do not have to submit names.

The Acting Chair: Section 30, NDP amendment:

“I move that section 30 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

“Commencement

“30. This act comes into force — ”

Mr Baird: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I have a point of order on this section relating to two issues involving this amendment, in addition to the 999 other amendments that accompany it.

I'd like to ask you to rule on these two important issues with respect to the issue of the commencement date of the legislation, when the legislation comes into force.

The first issue I'd like to raise is with respect to the amendments in question being out of order because they are inconsistent with a good number of the other sections of the bill that this committee has already dealt with.

I'm specifically referring to three sections with which we have already dealt with as a committee and made decisions on. I'm referring to the bill itself, subsection 2(1), with respect to the incorporation: “On January 1, 1998, the inhabitants of the urban area are constituted as a body corporate under the name of ‘City of Toronto’ in English and ‘cit  de Toronto’ in French.” That's the first reference.

The second reference is subsection 3(2) with respect to the council, with respect to when the rules apply. The council's terms of office are already in the bill to take place on January 1, 1998.

Finally, there is section 8 with respect to municipal and local board employees of the former municipalities becoming employees of the new municipality effective January 1, 1998.

I would refer to you Beauchesne's, page 207 of the sixth edition which addresses this very issue with respect to the admissibility of amendments in committee.

Section 698: "An amendment which is out of order on any of the following grounds cannot be put from the Chair:

"(1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negated.

"(2)" — which is the relevant section I would argue and submit — "An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the bill as so far agreed to by the committee, nor must it be inconsistent with a decision which the committee has given upon a former amendment."

I would submit to you, Mr Chair, that not only the first amendment but all of them are in fact inconsistent and contradictory. They are reopening issues which this committee has already dealt with on earlier sections of the bill that have not been amended.

On a second issue, I would further submit that failing that argument — I think it's very clear that the amendments are not in order by any standard — I think there is a second important issue. I would like to ask you to rule that the subsequent NDP amendments, subsequent to the one you were reading when I arose on my point of order, are not in order given that the subsequent NDP amendments deal with the amendment you're currently dealing with, the one relating to the issue of the debate of commencement. I would submit that the subsequent amendments are out of order as they are not, by any reasonable standard, of any consequential or significant difference from the first.

The House will be receiving and deciding upon the very amendment we're dealing with in just a few short minutes. The House will make a determination on that. I'm submitting to you that regardless of what happens, whether it's in favour or whether it's opposed to that amendment, it would make the others out of order.

The decision for example to reject the first amendment, if confirmed upon division, is explicitly and undeniably expressing its desire not to change the date the act would come into force. The subsequent thousand-odd amendments would simply attempt to revisit a decision that will already have been made by the House, something this House has clearly expressed a view and an opinion on, also something that is not in order and just against the practices of this House.

I'd refer you as well, Mr Chair, to the standing orders, section 51 on page 42. "No motion, or amendment, the subject matter of which has been decided upon, can be again proposed during the same session." This goes further than Beauchesne's does with respect to that issue.

Arguing as well that the amendments are inconsistent and contrary, referring to all but the first NDP amendment with respect to the date, they're simply attempting to revisit a decision that this House will take on the first one, which is a clearly expressed view and opinion, something that is not in order.

If the motion is passed, then I think we would all agree that if the first amendment that we're dealing with right now is passed, the other ones are definitely all out of order. I'm questioning, but I think it would be virtually unanimous, totally obvious on the surface.

What I'm arguing is that whether the amendments are passed or whether they're defeated, either way, the subsequent amendments are out of order and they would simply seek to revisit a decision of this House. Being so proximate — in a matter of hours in most cases — they simply revisit the very issue of the time when this act comes into force and those two issues, that I raised, do fall under the same point of order, I believe, because I think they are relatively the same issue.

The act has a good number of areas where I can only assume that the proposers of these amendments did not see that the council for this new city of Toronto will come into effect four years before the city comes into effect, and that would be somewhat ridiculous. The existing employees of the municipality would become employees of the new municipality four years before the municipality would be allowed to legally come into force. That is something that I think is untenable in the legislation.

You could argue very strongly as well that subsection 2(1) clearly indicates that the date when the residents of the city of Toronto will become incorporated into the new municipality is January 1, 1998. I argue and submit that the amendments are inconsistent and contradictory to the decisions taken by this House, a practice that is clearly out of order.

Further, the subsequent amendments to the first ones are of course out of order because they seek to revisit a decision already taken by this House in that amendment, regardless whether it's in favour or against.

Ms Lankin: On the same point of order, Mr Chair: The member for Nepean raises two essential points. Let me deal with the first one: The amendment must not be inconsistent with or contrary to the bill as so far agreed to by the committee. He points specifically to subsection 2(1), subsection 3(2) and section 8 and made references to amendments.

I would point out to the Chair that there is only one amendment that has in fact been carried by this House — and we all know that is the one dealing with Cafon Court — and there is no section as amended that has been carried by this House. In fact, all decisions have been deferred and there will be votes on all of those. So there have been no decisions taken by this House with respect to any section of this legislation.

The second argument that the member puts forward is that somehow these amendments, subsequent to the first one — and I would remind you that you can only deal with the one that is before you now. But he argues that these should be ruled out of order because a decision will have been taken with respect to the first one.

In a sense, without saying it, it's tantamount to an argument of saying that the amendments are frivolous. Quite frankly it is very clear, as you look at these, that each one of these does seek to amend a section that deals with the time when this act comes into force. That is true and you do amend that section by virtue of a date when that act will come into force.

If you are to look at the amendment before you right now it deals with December 31, 2002, but the subsequent amendments, each and every one of them, deal with a different date, and we have purposely started at the furthest date that suits the goal of our caucus, of what we believe is the appropriate time should this act, which we are opposed to, but should this act come into effect, we have set out the date that we think is most appropriate. We have worked back from there.

Just because one date is unacceptable to this Legislative Assembly, there is no reason to presume that other dates would also be unacceptable. We are moving the last date first and moving closer to the present. The Legislature might find that there are dates closer to the present that would be more acceptable. Therefore, each of these amendments will be in order, to be considered each on their own merit.

The last argument that the member put forward, although he said he had only two, he began to argue the content of sections of when city councils might come into effect, when employees might be transferred. I've already pointed out to you that those sections have not yet been passed. That's presumptuous to suggest that they in the end will be passed by this Legislature, and I would suggest that those arguments take on more of an ilk of arguments about the merit of the particular amendment we have put forward, and does not speak to whether or not those amendments are in order.

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): On the point of order, I won't belabour the point that's been made very well by the member for Beaches-Woodbine on the first issue that the member from Nepean raised, but I think it bears repeating that this committee at this stage has not agreed to any amendment except for the one dealing with Cafon Court. So for the member to argue that this is inconsistent because it goes contrary to other dates that, he's right, are set out in the proposals in the bill, those have not been agreed to at this point.

The same argument can be used with respect to his point around rule 51. There has been no decision made at this stage of the bill, and so again I think that rule 51, if it ever applied to these proceedings, which I don't think it does, cannot be used in this case to support the member from Nepean's position. It deals with subject matter decided upon. There is no subject matter that has been decided upon because there have been no decisions reached at this stage. There won't be until we get to the deferred votes. It's possible, I guess, that at that stage the argument might be put, and we'll deal with it at that point, but certainly at this point, at the very least it's premature and it doesn't apply.

Secondly, I believe that without getting into the merits of the issues, because I think procedurally it's stretching it a bit, quite frankly, to get into that, but if you feel that you need to, then I think that you would also have to be of the conclusion that given that we are dealing here with the basic issue of when the act would come into force, when it would receive royal assent, that, as we know, Chair, is the determining portion of any act.

It deals with when a new act is going to come into force, and if there was even remotely any inconsistency, that inconsistency surely would have to be addressed primarily through giving supremacy to this portion of the bill, on any bill, because this is the key portion of any bill, that kicks in, that determines when in fact the bill would come into force.

Sometimes bills set that out with a specific date, as we are proposing to do, and sometimes that is set out by leaving it up to an order in council by saying that it would come into effect on the day that it received royal assent, and leaving that decision on that date to be decided by the government. Either way of course is acceptable, and certainly either way has supremacy, I would argue, over any other portions of the bill.

So if you need to get into that second stage, I think even on that level you would have to find that this is quite in order, because it suggests a different date that this should come into effect.

Then with respect to the second part of the argument that the member from Nepean makes, that the amendments are not significantly different from each other, well, they are. They are because they suggest different dates. It may very well be that if you compare December 31, 2002, which is the first date I believe that we have, with December 30, 2002, you may not find much of a difference. But if you compared December 31, 2002, with December 31, 2001, then there is a difference of a year.

In fact, the amendments that we have put are set up in a graduating scale with the furthest date beginning on December 31, 2002, and coming back two years to be consistent with our position that this bill should not be adopted, and if it is to be adopted, it should not come into effect until after the next provincial election, so that the government can go out and test with the people of the province — as it's chosen not to do it through the other ways that are available to it now, such as a referendum — and particularly in this case the people in Metropolitan Toronto, whether they want this proposal or not.

But that's getting into the substance, and what I'm suggesting to you is we don't need to do that. I just wanted to put that in by way of explanation as to the rationale and therefore the soundness of the amendments, and as to why also they need to be deemed to be in order, because they are and they are very much in keeping with the way in which they'd need to be drafted. So on all of those grounds, I think that you have no choice but to find that the member from Nepean does not have a valid point of order.

Ms Castrilli: To respond to the point of order raised by the member from Nepean, I will try not to repeat what has been said by others. I will though make the point that standing order 51 is simply not applicable, as this bill has not yet been proclaimed. The amendments have been moved but there has been no voting on those amendments, and therefore citing that standing order is simply not appropriate.

I would make the following points, however. Firstly, the member for Nepean said that this amendment was inconsistent with the bill, and he cited a number of sections. Let me state first of all that there is simply no precedent for the notion that a change of date is out of order. If the member for Nepean could refer us to some, I'd certainly be very glad to consider it. But there are none, so we are dealing in an area which is in fact uncharted territory.

There is, however, abundant evidence for the proposition that if an amendment is relevant, that amendment is considered and dealt with by the House in an appropriate fashion. There is certainly no more relevant section to a piece of legislation than the date that legislation comes into effect, and I'd certainly be glad to cite you the authorities in the standing orders that deal with the relevance of an amendment.

To suggest therefore that this amendment would be inconsistent makes no sense at all. We have not yet approved a date, and therefore this is perfectly in order to be discussed at this time.

The final thing I would say, and this is in response to the member for Nepean about having to group all the amendments together and ruling them all out of order: There's simply no precedent for that either. It has been something that has been tried in this House. We know that the Speaker has ruled that there is no precedent, and certainly his ruling was not a precedent with respect to that, and therefore there is absolutely no reason to suggest that we should now group them all and deal with all of them out of order. Each one is specific. Each one needs to be considered on its merits and voted upon. It may very well be that different members of the House may have different views about each one of those amendments, and they are quite specifically different, one from the other.

I would say, therefore, that in the absence of precedent, in the absence of authority, Chair, you have no choice but to rule this amendment and subsequent amendments perfectly in order.

Hon Charles Harnick (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): Chair, I just want to add one thing. I think that on the face of it these amendments are purely frivolous, vexatious and they make a mockery of the Legislature. There is one question to be answered, and that is the day upon which the bill is to become effective, and they've put in every date that they could put in over about a two-year period, starting in the year 2000 or starting in 2002 and working backwards, and clearly I think on the face of it it's just obvious that it's frivolous, it's vexatious and it makes a mockery of the Legislature.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): On a point of order: I have to respond to that.

The Acting Chair: Have you anything new to add, because we would like to get on with making a decision?

Mr Wildman: Yes.

The Acting Chair: Okay.

Mr Wildman: The suggestion that because there are a series of amendments that deal with varying dates this is frivolous or vexatious is to ignore the fact that if this amendment were to pass, changing the date which is the import of the amendment —

Interjection: Pick a date.

Mr Wildman: We are dealing with a date in this particular amendment which is before the Chair, before the House, the committee. If this amendment were to be accepted — that is, if it were voted, if it were accepted by the committee — then it would have to be determined what happens with the other amendments, and it would be sensible to deal with that at that point. We don't deal with it now, because the import of the amendment is to change the date, to postpone the effective date of this legislation if it passes.

The suggestion then that we are being frivolous is to ignore the fact that it is a very important point that we are making, that this legislation should not come into effect on January 1, 1998, but at a much later date. We have a date before us in this amendment. If the committee picks this date, then we will deal with the other matter. If the Attorney General is suggesting that the majority on the committee is willing to pick another date, then they can vote either for or against the amendment to decide what the date should be. They do not have to rule it out of order; they simply vote for or against to determine whether or not they want the date.

The fact is, it's been repeated a number of times that nothing has been decided except one amendment in this whole process, because the committee has forced divisions. The divisions have not taken place as yet. The divisions will take place when we complete — I guess, because they've been stacked — when we complete dealing with all of the amendments on voice vote. So nothing has been decided, and therefore nothing is inconsistent.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, member from Algoma. I would beg your indulgence to recess for 15 minutes while I give some thought to this.

Interjections: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The committee recessed from 1912 to 1937.

The Acting Chair: Based on conversations I've been able to have with the clerk, and my own personal thoughts on the process, I cannot rule the amendment before me out of order. The official reason is written out here: "The amendments before me cannot be seen as contrary to decisions already taken, since no section or amendment has yet been decided by this committee," due to the fact that we have stood all the decisions down until the end, until the divisions, and we've not made any decisions yet. So that argument is not, unfortunately, valid.

As to the argument that there's no consequential or significant difference between the amendments, I find that the significant difference is in fact the date itself, so based on that I find the amendments are in order.

Mr Monte Kwinter (Wilson Heights): On a point of order, Mr Chair: I just would like the House to recognize that we have a former member and the mayor of Scarborough in the Speaker's Gallery, Mr Frank Faubert.

Mr Silipo: On a point of order, Mr Chair: In your ruling, which I obviously appreciate, the conclusion that you've arrived at, you said at one point "unfortunately," as if to say unfortunately you could not reach a different decision. I hope that I misinterpret the sense of that word, because I would not want to think that you personally think otherwise, other than the ruling that you've given.

The Acting Chair: My ruling is not debatable. Thank you.

Okay. On with the amendments.

Ms Lankin: On a point of order, Mr Chair: I do respect your talents and ability to read very quickly, and that's fine. You do have to give time for people to vote. I am responding when you ask if it's carried, and before I even get the "carried" out, you're asking for the ayes; before I get "aye" out, you're asking for the nays. You do have to give enough time for the vote to be conducted properly. It will not extend it by much. I'm not asking you to slow down extensively, but, please, let's just have some decorum in the process.

Mr Len Wood: On a point of order, Chair: We have two NDP members for when you turn your head for the deferral, as well as three or four — we've got about five or six from the Liberal party.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. I appreciate that notification.

NDP amendment, section 30:

Mr Howard Hampton (Rainy River): A point of order, Chair. I just came into the House and so I have not had an opportunity to hear the amendment you are reading, and the two that I have just listened to, I'm not able to distinguish exactly what you're saying because you're reading them so quickly. I wonder if you could begin again to read that so that I can be sure of what it is.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much. Prior to your arrival we have dealt with the speed that I read the amendments at, so it's not a point of order.

NDP amendment, section 30:

"I move that section 30 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

Mr Hampton: On a point of privilege, Chair: If I can read for a moment from Beauchesne, one of the fundamental parliamentary principles is freedom of speech, but I believe that the reciprocal of being able to speak to an issue is being able to hear the issue such that you understand it.

Now to my understanding, at least Beauchesne describes that freedom of speech as being absolutely fundamental to the parliamentary process. You may not agree with the amendment you're reading, you may absolutely disagree with the amendment you're reading, but as I understand Beauchesne, that freedom of speech and the reciprocal freedom or capacity to be able to hear and comprehend what is being voted on is absolutely essential to the exercise of parliamentary responsibility.

So I'm not requesting this as a point of order; I'm requesting as a point of privilege that you read the amendments such that I can hear them and understand what it's about, and also anyone else who might be interested, who might be watching or listening, also be able to understand what it is.

The Acting Chair: I appreciate your comments. I have read over 300 of these at the same speed. I will continue to read them at the same speed. They are your amendments. If you don't like the speed I'm reading them at, you're quite capable of challenging my ruling and calling in the Speaker. Is that what you wish to do?

Mr Hampton: I would hope it would not come to that.

The Acting Chair: Okay.

NDP motion, section 31, title, I'm ruling out of order because I cannot amend the title unless the bill has been amended to cause it. If you need I can read from the proceedings, but I've withdrawn that amendment.

Mr Silipo: Point of order, Chair: I thought we were to deal with the schedule before we deal with the title. Do I have that in reverse?

The First Deputy Chair: I guess so. It's the short title.

Mr Silipo: Oh, it's the short title.

The First Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr Silipo: Right it is. You're right, and so you're saying that the short title we've suggested, the Destruction of Local Communities and Tearing Down of Democracy Megacity Act, is out of order?

The First Deputy Chair: You can't read it because it's been ruled out of order.

Mr Silipo: I didn't understand the reason why it was ruled out of order.

The First Deputy Chair: Would you like me to read you the section?

Mr Silipo: I would, I think it would be useful for us.

The First Deputy Chair: The title can be amended only if the bill has been so altered as to necessitate such an amendment. That is the relevant section.

Mr Silipo: Chair, I will not dispute your ruling. We thought that the title that we had proposed was much more consistent with what was already in the bill, than what the Tories have already put in it.

The First Deputy Chair: You can't have a discussion about it, but you're free to challenge my ruling however.

The next one is a Liberal motion. It's a motion that recommends the committee vote against the schedule, and that is out of order.

The next motion, a Liberal motion, is also out of order because it asks that the schedule be struck out. The proper way to do that is to vote against the schedule.

Okay, Government motion:

"Schedule

"I move that the schedule for the bill be struck out and the following substituted:

The First Deputy Chair: We’re now going to deal with the four Liberal amendments which were stood down at the very beginning of the process. That’s why I’m going back to section 1. The Liberal motion is sections 1 to 31 and schedule. That is out of order because it is beyond the scope of the bill.

The Liberal motion is to strike the entire bill and it’s out of order.

This Liberal motion is also out of order for the same reason.

“I move that the bill be amended by striking out ‘board of trustees’ wherever it appears and substituting ‘board of advisers.’”

Shall the motion carry? All those in favour, say “aye.” Those opposed, say “nay.” In my opinion, the nays have it. The vote will be deferred.

Mr Tony Clement (Brampton South): On a point of order, Madam Chair: At this time I’d like to move that the committee rise and report.

The First Deputy Chair: I have to rule that out of order because you cannot move that a committee rise and report during time allocation. So it’s ruled out of order.

Mr Clement: Actually then, I would like to appeal that to the Speaker.

The First Deputy Chair: Okay. We will await the decision of the Speaker.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the Speaker.

27

The First Deputy Chair: Speaker, the committee of the whole has risen because a ruling I made has been appealed to the member for Brampton South.

Mr Clement: Mr Speaker, I requested that the honourable Chair — I moved that the committee rise and report and she refused to do so.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): The committee must complete its work before it can rise and report, so I uphold the ruling of the Chair.

Although this is a rather unusual departure from procedure, in the absence of a dissenting voice, I will presume leave of the House to entertain a request for unanimous consent from the government House leader.

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, the reason we have unanimous consent is to allow you to indicate to the House the agreed-upon voting procedure for the recorded divisions on Bill 103 in the Committee of the whole House.

The Speaker: Voting agreement, Bill 103: The Chair shall recess the committee of the whole until 8 am on Thursday, April 10, 1997. The Chair shall cause the bells to ring for a recorded division at five minutes before 8 am. Voting blocks will be four hours long. At 15 minutes before the end of each voting block, there will be a recess during which the doors will be opened. At five minutes before the end of each recess, the bells will ring to call in the members.

Following the first division bell and following each recess, the members will take their seats. The Sergeant at Arms will ensure the east and west lobbies are clear of members. The table clerks will count the members of each party and announce the number to the Chair. The House leader or whip of each party will indicate agreement with the announced number.

The Chair will put the question. When the Chair says, “Those in favour,” the House leader or whip of any party will say “aye.” The Chair will then say, “Those opposed,” and the House leader or whip of any party will say “nay.” An alternate member may be designated for this purpose if the House leader or whip indicates who that member is to the Chair. The table clerks will inform the Chair of the vote numbers and the Chair will announce the results to the House.

For the purposes of this voting process and notwithstanding standing order 127, the standing committees chairs will not be required to suspend the proceedings to enable members to attend the vote.

Immediately following each bell, all doors, including outer doors to the east and west lobbies and the access door to the Premier’s office, will be locked until the number of members for each party has been ascertained and announced and the first vote has been taken.

Following the first vote, the chamber doors to the east and west lobbies at the throne end of the chamber will be opened and shall remain open throughout the voting period. For the balance of the voting period up until each recess, members will have access to the east and west lobbies. Any member who wishes to exit the chamber into the east or west lobbies must exit via the Speaker’s chair only.

The Deputy Speaker and chairs of the committee of the whole will rotate every two hours. There will be two substitute members for each chair occupant. These substitute members will be determined by the Speaker. During this process the Chairs will be permitted to vote in their House dress.

The Speaker shall access the chamber through the main doors. House staff have access through the main doors throughout the voting period. Media: usual access; political staff: access through press gallery and down stairs behind the throne; public: restricted to public galleries. Members' galleries will be closed.

Any questions or disputes arising out of this agreement shall be determined by the Speaker.

I received a request from all three House leaders indicating that all three parties would have no objections if I agree to lift the suspension affecting the member for Sudbury. I am therefore agreeing to lift the suspension.

I do now leave the chair, for the House to go into committee of the whole.

House in committee of the whole.

The First Deputy Chair: Pursuant to the order of the House, this committee will recess until 8 am tomorrow morning.

The committee recessed from 2332 to 0800, Thursday 10 April, 1997.

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

CITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1996 LOI DE 1996 SUR LA CITÉ DE TORONTO

Continuing consideration of Bill 103, An Act to replace the seven existing municipal governments of Metropolitan Toronto by incorporating a new municipality to be known as the City of Toronto / Projet de loi 103, Loi visant à remplacer les sept administrations municipales existantes de la communauté urbaine de Toronto en constituant une nouvelle municipalité appelée la cité de Toronto.

The Chair (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Will the clerks please take the count.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): Mr Chair, the government party has 50 members.

The Chair: House leader, your party has 50 members. Do you agree?

Hon David Johnson (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet, Government House Leader): Agreed.

Clerk Assistant: The official opposition has 15.

The Chair: House leader, you have 15. Do you agree?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Yes.

Clerk Assistant: The third party has seven.

The Chair: House leader, do you agree, seven?

Mr Bud Wildman (Algoma): Yes.

The Chair: I have a government amendment to section 1.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): On a point of order, Mr Chair: I rise on a point of order on a number of issues that have been raised in the past number of days. We've sat a long time in this place. We've sat for many hours, 24 hours a day for over a week. We're now in for another long siege, it would appear. Members have been away from their families. It certainly has been most trying for all of us in this House.

The point of order I'm asking for you to rule on is the similar types of rulings that have been done in the previous committee of the whole sessions with respect to voting on groupings. I'm referring specifically to section 4, section 29 and section 30, in other words, the points of order that were raised on those specific sections, that instead of the entire amendment being read with respect to streets, the street name be read and that will hopefully shorten down the process. I think members have indicated that they want to be able to identify these amendments, and that sounds fair, but I think to read all of the amendments with respect to streets, with respect to heritage sites, with respect to dates, would take us into an extraordinarily unusual length of time.

Mr Chair, I would ask that you would rule with respect to all of those amendments and all of those groupings that they be placed in that fashion.

Mr Wildman: On a point of order, Mr Chair: First I would like you to clarify why the government member would rise to raise this matter now when we have before us, as I understand your comment, a government amendment. This is rather odd, to say the least. If you will clarify that, and if you are prepared to hear arguments on this particular matter at this point, we are prepared to make them, but it is rather strange that he would be raising arguments about opposition amendments which are not yet even called before us.

Hon David Johnson: Mr Chair, just to clarify, if it's required, the member is rising on a point of order at this point because this is the start of the voting procedure. What he is questioning is, in his view, the flexibility and the ability of the Chair and perhaps ultimately of the Speaker to guide this process so that all of the amendments which we will be considering in the future will be under the purview of the decision that you're about to make, and perhaps the Speaker is about to make.

Over the course of the next day and days we will be encountering a number of groupings. The next particular amendment may not be one that fits that category, but this is the appropriate time, right at the outset, to set the game rules, the procedures. We all know that there is a grouping of some 8,000 amendments which are almost entirely similar. There is another grouping, from the opposition party, of some 2,000 amendments which are largely similar. We feel that it's appropriate at this point for you to consider this matter and to establish the rules in that regard by which we will be governed over the course of this particular vote.

Mr Wildman: I asked for clarification on that matter before we proceed.

The Chair: Just give me a few minutes and we'll give you a decision.

Mr Wildman: I'm questioning whether it's appropriate for us to be dealing with this when you've called a government amendment.

The Chair: We'll be dealing first with the voting process, and that was raised by Mr Tilson. I will entertain arguments on that. Mr Tilson, if I understood you properly, there are two issues here. One is to deal with the grouping of the amendments and the second is the reading of the amendments.

Mr Tilson: Mr Chairman, that's correct, although I'm going one step further. If you recall, in the committee of the whole sessions we've had in the past number of days with respect to specifically streets, it was finally narrowed down to where simply the street name was referred to. I'm going one step further and saying we now know what all of those are, and surely all of those 8,000 could be voted on in one block, as could the other references with respect to historic sites and with respect to dates. I'm going even further than what the House or the committee did in the past number of days of voting individually on each individual street. I'm saying, call those groupings as is done in the House of Commons, where in fact there is a specific standing order that refers to voting in groupings. I believe this is the appropriate time to do that in this place.

Mr Wildman: Speaker, that's a very innovative approach. To suggest that we can deem a rule that doesn't exist is really a strange argument. The House of Commons has a rule; that means they passed a rule in the House and it was debated and passed. We have no such rule in this House.

Mr Doug Galt (Northumberland): It's time.

Mr Wildman: A member says it's time. He may feel that way. Unfortunately for him and his colleagues, it is not now in existence. A member can make an argument that we should look at parliamentary practice in this assembly, that we can consult Speakers' rulings and parliamentary practice in other parliaments, and that those rulings and precedents can be applied, and I would certainly agree with that.

One cannot suggest that because another assembly has a rule, that that rule should be applied here, when the rule does not exist here. It's just not possible, and to say the least, it is a rather odd argument. In the House of Commons, there is indeed a rule that allows the Speaker the discretion to group amendments that are similar. I don't think I have to go any further than to say that rule does not exist in this House, and therefore it does not apply.

It is certainly true that according to Beauchesne, members of the committee could, by unanimous consent, agree to have amendments and votes grouped, and that we could indeed agree to do any number of amendments that are similar together. I don't think it's any surprise to the members of the assembly when I tell them categorically that our caucus does not give unanimous consent for that to happen here. So that is dealt with.

In Erskine May, on page 490, it states that during debate the "grouping of amendments for debate is designed to prevent repetition," and further, "The chairman may at his discretion allow separate divisions on one or more of the subsequent amendments" after the debate.

We all know we are under a time allocation motion that has been imposed by this government because they are determined to ram this through against the wishes of 76% of the population of Metropolitan Toronto, a time allocation motion that very specifically constrained debate in this committee, constrained it to one hour only. We are not dealing with a matter before us for debate. We are dealing with the divisions for votes. We are deciding the issue.

It is our contention that we must decide the issue on each individual amendment, because each of them deals with a different matter; a different group of people is involved.

I want to remind the members of the House that one of the amendments referred to by the member for Dufferin-

Peel has indeed been passed by this committee. When he talks about 8,000 amendments, one of them has already been accepted by the majority in this committee and will be part of the law if this bill passes and is declared law by the Court. It has been demonstrated already in this committee that the majority on the committee is not going to treat all the amendments in the same way. The majority on the committee has already decided that one of the amendments should pass and has indicated that they don't want the rest to pass by forcing division. We don't know that for sure. They've already passed one; it is conceivable that —

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): We didn't. We heard no —

Mr Wildman: Chair, I know that that's out of order and surely the member would not be suggesting the Speaker did not rule correctly in this House.

Interjections.

The Chair: Order. The member for Algoma has the floor.

Mr Wildman: I regret that members would show such disrespect for the Speaker and his high office.

Interjections.

Mr Wildman: I won't respond, but I will say, Chair, that all of us in this House are bound by the rulings of the Speaker. It is our responsibility to accept those rulings because it is a rule in this House that the Speaker's rulings, unlike the Chair's rulings, cannot be challenged. Again I note that Erskine May is talking about grouping of amendments for debate. We are not involved in debate at this point. We are deciding the motion through divisions. I think it is indeed unfortunate that the government's drastic time allocation motion is not allowing debate on these issues, as we should be doing, but we are indeed not in debate.

I would also turn to the ruling of Speaker with regard to how we dealt with these amendments when they were being read into the record. The Speaker in dealing with the amendments to section 24(4), when he made his ruling, stated clearly, and I quote, that his ruling "should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future. This does not mean that I'm finding these amendments to be frivolous or tendered in a spirit of mockery." The Speaker made no indication that in making that ruling he was waiving the full reading of amendments which is so stringently required in Beauchesne.

It is clearly beyond the authority of the Chair of this committee to, upon his own volition, exercise the authority to act in exceptional circumstances, as the Speaker did. That would be quite extraordinary. It would be quite extraordinary for the Chair of this committee to extend an abridgement of the rights of the members of this House to hearing amendments read upon division. I'm saying the amendments can be grouped, but only by unanimous consent, and that unanimous consent is not forthcoming.

There is no rule here. With regard to the reading of the amendments, when the Speaker ruled he made it clear it was not a precedent and he also did not waive the reading of amendments for this proceeding. It is our contention that in order for amendments to be understood, members of the committee have the right, and indeed the responsibility if they don't understand what is before them, to request the amendment to be read so that they and others who are observing the proceedings and others who are participating in the proceedings will understand fully what the amendment is and its import before voting.

I call on you, Chair, to exercise your responsibility first to deal with amendments individually, and second to protect the rights of all members of the House to request amendments to be read if they are unsure of what is before them or in any way confused about the import or possible impact of the amendment if it is passed.

Ms Annamarie Castrilli (Downsview): I'll deal first with the government's submission on the motion to combine amendments and subsequently with dispensing the reading of the amendments. Let me say to you, Chair, that there's absolutely no authority for the propositions which the government has put before you. There is nothing in our standing orders, there's nothing in our traditions, there's nothing in the legislative precedents which would guide you to rule as the government would have you do.

Our standing orders are silent on the point. The only standing order that in fact exists is a ruling of the House of Commons that has no application whatsoever to our circumstances. There has never been a vote in the history of this Legislature that has in fact been on the basis that the government suggests. I will remind you that subsection 1(a) of our standing orders clearly says, "The proceedings in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and in all committees of the assembly shall be conducted according to the following standing orders." I defy the members of the government to find one standing order that supports their proposition.

Section 1(b) goes on to say, "In all contingencies not provided for in the standing orders the question shall be decided by the Speaker or Chair, and in making the ruling the Speaker or Chair shall base the decision on the usages and precedents of the Legislature and parliamentary tradition." Again, the government has presented no evidence that there are any such precedents or any such parliamentary traditions.

In other words, in situations which aren't addressed by the standing orders, Chair, the decision falls upon you and your discretion must be guided by what I will cite to you are some of the rules for exercising such discretion. Firstly I would cite to you Beauchesne's citation 327:

"The Speaker or the Chairman of a committee of the whole ought not to consider the consequences of the adoption or rejection of a motion or an amendment, nor is it their concern whether ministers of the crown or private members are proceeding fast enough with their bills or motions. All the Speaker has to do is to see that the rules of procedure are observed."

I will recall to you that the Speaker himself cited the content of that citation in one of his previous rulings. Therefore it's not up to you to decide whether time is a factor, whether speed is a factor, whether expeditiousness is a factor. That is up to the House to determine. Your concern is to ensure that the procedures of the House are followed.

I also submit to you that if you were to find that the government motion is in order, you would be breaching the parliamentary privileges of this House. Beauchesne's defines parliamentary privileges as the "sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals."

The paragraph then goes on to say that such privileges "are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity." With respect to the privileges of the House as a whole, Beauchesne states, "The most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them."

The standing orders again, I submit to you, are silent, and for you to adopt the position of the government would amount to creating a new order which this House has in fact not agreed to. The only way that the motion of the government could be acceded to is if there were unanimous consent of this House, and it would certainly be open to anyone to ask for unanimous consent of this House with respect to that.

Reference has been made to the standing order of the House of Commons rule 76(5). I'd like to just read it for the members so they know what we're talking about. It says, "The Speaker shall have the power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage...." It's very specific: "at the report stage." We are not at the report stage and the rule has no application to this House, but even if it did it would be inapplicable because it does not pertain to the conditions that we are in at the moment.

You should also be aware that it is not mandatory for the Speaker to combine amendments even under rule 76(5). The commentary to rule 76(5) of the House of Commons states that section 5 authorizes the Speaker to make decisions concerning whether motions can be considered by the House or not. Those that can may be grouped for debate when one vote will dispense with a grouping or a series of votes, depending on the Chair's decision, but in any event there is a facility for consultation with the members pursuant to the commentary. It is not an absolute and unfettered discretion on the part of the Chair to simply group amendments, even if that section were applicable, which we submit it is not.

There has been, as you know, one amendment which has indeed passed this House, so the contention that we would be able to vote on all of them at once and that we would get an identical vote is certainly not supported by the evidence before us. It falls again under the issue of privilege that members should have the opportunity to vote on each amendment and to be able to do it as they wish. There is absolutely no predetermination of votes nor should there be in this case. Members simply cannot be deprived of the opportunity to judge each amendment as a separate question and upon its own merits.

Further, Chair, I would remind you that the Speaker himself has pointed out repeatedly during this process that members have the right to know what they have voted on. In his ruling with respect to our Liberal amendments to section 29, he stated, "The principle that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on must guide me in this circumstance." I would suggest to you that this is another of those circumstances by which you must be guided by the Speaker's own words.

As to the reading of the amendments and dispensing with them, I think I've already dealt with some of it under the category of privilege. It is simply a privilege of each member of this House to know what it is that they are voting on. Section 28(c) of the standing orders deals with division and it reads as follows, "When the members have been called in, the Speaker shall again put the question and every member present at that time, subject to standing order 12, shall record his or her vote." Section 1(a) of the standing orders, which I've read before, provides that, "The proceedings in the Legislative Assembly...shall be conducted according to the...standing orders." That is the one standing order that applies in this particular case.

It is not just a matter of practice and tradition; it is clearly set out in the standing orders that the question must be put again before division. It is not just a matter of long-standing parliamentary tradition; as I've said, it's a requirement. Therefore it isn't up to the Chair to decide how or whether to enforce this requirement. It's a provision of the rules governing this House and must be enforced by the Chair. The practice of requiring an amendment to be read gives all of the members of the House the opportunity to hear the proposed amendment, to consider it and to know what they are voting on. You have a right, you have a duty and a responsibility to preserve that right

We acknowledge that the Speaker has already ruled that he has latitude to act in exceptional circumstances. We also know that the House is dealing with an exceptional circumstance: We are dealing with an extraordinary number of amendments. Yet we submit that in order to protect and preserve the privilege of members, as you are required to do under our traditions and under our standing orders, you must ensure that there is a reading before division.

In the case of our own amendments under section 29, not to read the amendments would indeed be a breach of those privileges. As you know, each amendment is quite different. It requires the insertion of three and sometimes four pieces of information, and to suggest that we would be able to simply vote on all of them as a package and dispense with the reading would certainly be a fundamental breach of our privileges.

Therefore, Chair, in conclusion, I submit to you that there is no authority for the propositions that the government has put before you; that in fact if you were to act in accordance with the government's motion, you would be breaching the fundamental privileges of this House, and that is certainly something that this House would be extremely diminished by.

Ms Frances Lankin (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr Chair, my colleague for Algoma has already alluded to the non-applicability of rules from our other parliamentary Houses to the procedures in this Legislative Assembly and I will not go over that argument again. What I would like to do is deal specifically with the two rulings on this issue which have already been made during the course of the committee proceeding by the Speaker of this Legislative Assembly. I believe both rulings are germane and directly to the point that has been raised by the member for Dufferin-Peel.

The member argues first that individual amendments need not be read and second that groups of amendments could be put to the question at the same time. Obviously both issues are decided by the primary question of whether or not each individual amendment must be read.

I draw you to two rulings of the Speaker. I will not be long taking you through these. I think they're very direct and that the question raised by the member for Dufferin-Peel is essentially a challenge to the rulings of the Speaker. On Sunday last, the Speaker, when presented with a question of whether or not the New Democratic Party amendments to section 24 must each be read individually, ruled as follows: He began by reviewing the procedures and practices in this House and came to the conclusion that the practice was that the text must be read and that the fundamental parliamentary principle behind this procedure is that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on. He reviewed specific precedents that were set before him in the arguments and found in review of those precedents that the Chair was absolutely correct in his ruling: Our practice and procedures require the amendments to be read.

He does speak to the issue of the Speaker having latitude to act in exceptional circumstances and finds that the House is in fact facing an exceptional circumstance, and as a result of that he proposes that with the balance of the New Democratic Party amendments to section 24 they be read in a way which expedites the process and just simply refers to street name.

He does that, however, in light of two specific recommendations to the House. The first is a strong recommendation to the House that it direct its energies in the future to develop proposals that will address our legislative process with a view to adding it to report stage procedures, which would go a long way to solving this kind of problem, a direction to the House to examine its own rules in the future. We believe, in fact, and have had indication that this will be a subject of future discussion in this Legislative Assembly.

The second I think is very critical to the Speaker's ruling. He says, "In closing, I implore the House leaders to begin the process of negotiating an agreement that will resolve this impasse for the benefit of the members, the employees, the citizens of this province and this great institution." It was my argument when a similar challenge arose on Tuesday to the individual reading of the Liberal amendments to section 29 that the Speaker himself made this exceptional ruling in order to create the context, create the atmosphere for negotiations of the parties to resolve the impasse, something that he could not step in and do himself, but that he attempted to create the atmosphere for that. Mr Chair, as you know, at this point in time, with the good efforts of all parties, unfortunately resolve was not found.

On Tuesday when this issue was raised again, however, to the Speaker with respect to the Liberal amendments to section 29, he was asked to rule that a similar procedure could be followed, that we could simply refer to the cities and the street names in the case of those amendments. It was argued before Speaker Stockwell that he would be creating a precedent that goes beyond the rules of this House were he to repeat his ruling, which was of an exceptional nature, that ruling with respect to the amendments of section 24 by the New Democratic Party.

In his ruling on Tuesday he ruled, and I believe that this is the definitive and final statement on this issue:

"Let me begin by saying that I, as much as anyone here, would welcome a vehicle by which this process could be expedited. We are here in the midst of a procedural impasse of logarithmic proportions. We are faced with an impossible task" — and I want to underscore this point in the Speaker's ruling, Mr Chair — "We are faced with an impossible task but one which falls within the bounds of our procedures." Very clearly, he sets out: But I want to be very clear to all members of this House. I cannot and will not, by virtue of my rulings on this issue in this very difficult circumstance, create a precedent that will impose a future solution that is more properly decided by this House."

Mr Chair, the ruling has been made twice by the Speaker of this Legislative Assembly. The member for Dufferin-Peel seeks to appeal that ruling. As you know, rulings of the Speaker are not appealable; therefore, I submit to you that you have no latitude except to rule the point of order not to be a point of order.

Hon David Johnson: Mr Chair —

The Chair: Do you have any new arguments to bring that we haven't hear so far?

Hon David Johnson: Mr Chair, I guess the main impetus behind this challenge was with regard to groupings. To the outside world this is Thursday, April 3, but we all know in here it's actually still Wednesday, April 2. Here we are some eight days later going and going and going.

Interjection.

Hon David Johnson: As the member behind says, it's sort of like the movie Groundhog Day: You wake up every morning and it's the same thing over and over and over again. One wonders if the end is ever in sight. What was that tune the actor heard every morning? I wake up every morning and hear that same tune.

Eight days, Mr Chair. When one looks at the latitude that is available in the House of Commons — and, yes, it is a specific rule, but we do know that Chairs and Speakers have certain latitudes, have the ability to ensure that the proceedings are carried out in an expeditious way. We're asking, Mr Speaker and Mr Chair, in the spirit of the procedures that are in place in the federal government, that the same sort of approach be taken during these periods.

The matter has arisen with regard to reading of the amendments — in addition to grouping, the reading of the amendments. I'm not sure if you intend at this point to rule on both the reading of the amendments as well as the groupings.

The Chair: Yes.

Hon David Johnson: All right. Then perhaps more to the point, the Speaker's ruling, a ruling that I would say was applauded by all members in this House, all parties in this House —

Interjection.

Hon David Johnson: The House leader for the opposition party is, I think, agreeing that this was a good resolution, that only the street names should be read, particularly in the case of section 24.

Interjections.

The Chair: Order. The minister has the floor.

Hon David Johnson: In his ruling he said that on occasion, particularly when faced with extraordinary circumstances, Speakers may have to intervene in a way which seeks to enable the parliamentary process to accomplish the business at hand, and that's what we're seeking to do here this morning, through you, Mr Chair, simply to accomplish the business at hand.

The Speaker's ruling, I believe, in the case of simply reading the street names, very similar amendments, entirely similar amendments except for the street name, was in the spirit of allowing the Parliament to do the business at hand, at the same time allowing the members to understand. It's our contention that in fact that ruling is still in place, that this ruling as it pertains to section 24 was made during the course of the submissions of this committee of the whole. In fact, we remain in that committee of the whole and that ruling remains in effect, and we would ask that you uphold that ruling of the Speaker, particularly as it pertains to section 24, Mr Chair.

The Chair: The member for Downsview, do you have any new arguments that we haven't heard so far?

Ms Castrilli: I just wish to respond to the contention of the government House leader. The government House leader cited the Speaker's decision with respect to the NDP amendment to section 24(4). He conveniently left out the part that said, "This process will be applied to this series of amendments only and should not be construed to be a precedent for the reading of amendments in the future."

Even were that not the case, if you want to argue that it is a precedent, then I would look for the rest of the ruling as well, Mr House Leader. I'd say to you that you should look at the section where the Speaker says:

"The practice of requiring an amendment to be read provides all members present with the opportunity to hear the proposed amendment. The fundamental parliamentary principle behind this procedure is that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on.

"Under a time allocation motion such as we are currently operating under, the procedure is altered somewhat. The first part of the process is eliminated by virtue of the terms of the motions which state the amendments are deemed to have been moved. This does not, however, mean that the amendment is also deemed to have been read from the chair." I'll skip the next part in the interests of time. "The Chair may only dispense with the reading of the amendment with unanimous consent, even in the face of a time allocation motion such as the one we are operating under."

I submit to you, Chair, that the government House leader can't have it both ways. He can't say, "Sorry, the ruling of the Speaker applies," even though the Speaker says it doesn't apply and then ignore the sections that support the principle of the long-standing practice of allowing members to know what they're voting on and reading the amendments.

The Chair: No arguments, no more debates. It is my decision that amendments can only be grouped by unanimous consent. As to the reading of amendments, it is my opinion that under the terms of the Speaker's ruling the amendments to section 24(4) need not be read.

Mr Wildman: I challenge that part of your ruling, Mr Chair.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the Speaker.

The Speaker (Hon Chris Stockwell): Please be seated.

The Chair: Mr Speaker, my ruling as to the grouping of the amendments and the reading of the amendments has been challenged. We ask that you pass a ruling on the grouping of the amendments on section 24(4).

The Speaker: Who challenged it?

The Chair: Mr Wildman, the member for Algoma.

Mr Wildman: Just for clarity, Speaker, I would point out that the Chair ruled on two issues. I am in no way challenging the ruling on one. I understand the government has objections to that.

The Speaker: Actually, I was watching. I think I have a pretty good idea.

Ms Lankin: Do you want us to speak to both issues at the same time?

The Speaker: I would think it would save time if you spoke to both issues, yes.

Mr Wildman: The first issue was a request by the member for Dufferin-Peel that the amendments be grouped. In other words, that all 8,000 of the amendments that were put by our party with regard to consultations with residents of the municipalities in Metropolitan Toronto by street should be dealt with together. He cited a number of authorities I guess that he thought justified this request.

First he cited the rule in the House of Commons which allows the Speaker discretion to group similar amendments, and of course, the Chair did not rule in favour of that, because it's simple that the rule that applies in the House of Commons does not exist in this assembly. Our rules do not include such a rule, and therefore, it's an interesting note, but it has absolutely nothing to do with the issue.

The Chair has ruled that amendments can be grouped by unanimous consent, and we agree that indeed if all members of the committee were to say that they were prepared to have any number of amendments grouped together and unanimously agreed to that, we could indeed do that. In this particular instance, such unanimous consent is not forthcoming, and I have indicated that our caucus will not agree to that, so unanimous consent does not apply.

There have been references to your rulings previously with regard to the reading of amendments, and it is that that I am challenging, the ruling of the Chair. The Chair is basically applying your ruling with regard to the reading of amendments dealing with the streets and extending it to this process, despite the fact that in making your ruling, you stated clearly that your ruling "should not be construed as a precedent for reading amendments in the future."

At the time you made your ruling, you cited exceptional circumstances, and it's true we are still in exceptional circumstances. This committee faces a very large number of amendments. But it is our view that there is a particularly interesting situation we find ourselves in now, since the member for Dufferin-Peel has been referring to all 8,000 of those amendments. One of those amendments passed the committee on a voice vote. The majority indicated that they are not about to treat all of these amendments similarly. At least in one case, the majority of the committee decided to accept the amendment, so it seems to me that it would be very odd and quite bizarre for us now to say that all of the amendments, including the one on Cafon Court, should be voted on together. The one on Cafon Court has not been referred for division, and since the others have been referred for division, how are we to know in advance that members of the committee intend to deal with them all in the same fashion, since they have not dealt with one of them in a fashion that indicates that they will all be rejected by the majority or will all be accepted by the majority? How are we to know?

I submit to you that we should not be grouping the amendments, that they should be dealt with individually so that the committee can deal with them on an individual basis and decide which residents, if any, should be consulted on regulations that may affect them in the future.

I also submit that in regard to the reading of the amendments, it is incumbent upon all of us in voting in this committee to know what we are voting on. It is important, particularly if we're dealing with the amendments individually, for us to recognize which ones we're voting on. Therefore, we should know what they are, and to say that by simply identifying the street name we would then know is insufficient. We are, after all, responsible in voting for knowing the impact and the import of the amendment if it passes, what effect it might have, and by simply reading the street name to identify the amendment, members who may not be familiar with the amendment or are confused will not have the opportunity to do what is their right, and that is to request that the amendment be read so that they know what exactly they're voting on. What does this consultation that is suggested entail? What kind of time frame will it take? How will it work as per the amendment that is before them?

I suggest that we should not abridge the rights of members. I would suggest it is not only a right of a member to request that an amendment be read so that she or he can know exactly what she or he is voting on, but

It is indeed a responsibility, if they are not sure, for members to request it be read so they can be sure on what effect their vote might have on the amendment. So I suggest on the two issues, first, that we accept that groupings cannot occur except by unanimous consent, and second, that your previous ruling with regard to the reading of these amendments should not apply in this particular case, since it was not a precedent.

Mr Tilson: Mr Speaker, I will be speaking to the first point, the point that deals with the process applying to voting on stacked votes, and I might comment first of all with respect to the member for Algoma, who talked about the vote with respect to Cafon Court. That amendment, as he has indicated, has already passed, and I would submit to you that that specific amendment wouldn't be part of the group voting.

Mr Wildman: There may be another one.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Tilson: That particular amendment wouldn't be part of the group voting that we would be asking you in your discretion to put forward, and it is that discretion that I'm asking you to direct your attention to.

We do find ourselves in an unprecedented situation. We have spent more than one week sitting 24 hours a day, reading amendments. Many of them have been very repetitive and specifically the ones with respect to section 24 and section 29, those dealing with streets and I guess historical streets would be the Liberal amendments with respect to section 29.

We are now about to begin another part of the process, which is formally voting on each of the amendments that have been put forward over the past week. In order to prepare for this process, we have been forced to stock the members' lobbies with supplies. Some members have even brought in sleeping bags. Members of their staff will be kept away, all of our staff, the clerks, the table, the security, this entire constituency, will be kept away from their families for another huge block of time. I have no idea what this length of time will be. It will certainly be an inordinate length of time. Members will be forced to camp out in their offices within minutes of this chamber, and the list is endless.

Standing order 1(b) states: "In all contingencies not provided for in the standing orders, the question shall be decided by the Speaker or Chair, and in making the ruling the Speaker or Chair shall base the decision on the usages and precedents of the Legislature and parliamentary tradition." So, Mr Speaker, I'm asking you to help expedite an already extraordinarily long process and provide a ruling that will enable the committee of the whole to complete this whole process in a timely and fair fashion.

On April 6, after five days of committee of the whole, you recognized that the House finds itself in an exceptional circumstance in dealing with an extraordinary number of amendments, and that ruling has been referred to during the presentation to the Chair of the committee of the whole. You made it clear on that occasion, and to use your words, "On occasion, in particular when faced with extraordinary circumstances, Speakers may have to intervene in a way which seeks to enable the parliamentary process to accomplish the business at hand." So on April 6, after five days of debate, you agreed to shorten the process in dealing with the NDP amendments to subsection 24(4) by requiring the Chair to read just the street name prior to putting the question on each amendment as opposed to reading the entire amendment.

Mr Speaker, I believe groupings of divisions with respect to subsection 24(4) to be an effective way of, in your own words that you used in your ruling, "enabling the parliamentary process to accomplish the business at hand." The House of Commons standing order, section 76(5) states that the Speaker shall have the power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage and may, if he or she thinks fit, call upon any member who has given notice of an amendment to give such explanation of the subject of the amendment as may enable the Speaker to form a judgement upon it. I believe that it's reasonable, if not imperative, that you consider combining the NDP amendments of subsection 24(4) using as a guide the House of Commons standing order 76(5).

Beauchesne also cites standing order section 76(5) as a precedent for the Speaker to use as a reference when considering the grouping of amendments for the purposes of voting. Beauchesne states: "By practice, the Speaker will also decide whether the motions will be voted separately or in groups," and I would ask that you look at this authority when you're considering your ruling.

I would also ask that you pay particular attention to a ruling made by Speaker Fraser on April 14, 1987, in the House of Commons. He stated: "There comes a time when the Chair has to face its responsibilities. When circumstances change and the rules of procedure provide no solution, the Chair must fall back on its discretion and in the interests of the House and all its members." I think of all of my presentation to you, that is the section that I'd like you to consider the most.

After over 200 hours of consideration of amendments at committee of the whole, I ask you again to exercise the discretion that was afforded to the Speaker to protect the interests of the House, of the members, and more particularly, the integrity of the process, and facilitate the swift completion of this stage of the process.

Mr Speaker, I believe it's time for you to intervene again, as you did with respect to section 24. Grouping divisions on the NDP motions to section 24(4) as an example would limit committee of the whole voting to hours, as opposed to days or weeks. I submit that with all these types of groupings, you have the discretion to exercise, as you already have — and it may be only for this particular occasion. Beauchesne talks about special orders on page 5: "A special order may have the effect for only a single occasion or such longer term as may be specified. It has become the custom in modern times to apply the term 'special order' to all rules which have only temporary effect."

You made that clear with respect to your ruling on section 24(4), that for this special occasion — and I would submit that these groupings which you have in the discretion and you could formulate different types of groupings with respect to section 24, the streets, or section 29 with respect to the heritage streets. It's your discretion to prepare those types of groupings. I would submit that you have this discretion to put forward assistance to the Chair of this committee, the committee of the whole, grouping divisions with respect to this bill.

Ms Castrilli: In the interests of time, I will speak to both the issue of grouping and the reading of the motion. Speaker, there are really two major issues here. One is what discretion you have in the absence of statutory precedents in our standing orders or legislative precedents. Second is the privileges of the members of this House. Those are the issues for you to consider.

Under those rubrics, I'll look at a number of issues. The first is that there is simply nothing in either the standing orders or in the authorities that would give you any explicit guidance in this particular situation and there are no precedents, as we have said. Our standing orders are silent. You are required by standing order 1(a) to conduct this House in accordance with the standing orders, but the standing orders are silent. Standing order 1(b), which the member for Dufferin-Peel has cited, specifically says that you must look at usages and precedents in the absence of standing orders, but as I've indicated, there are none. In other words, it comes down to a question of your discretion.

In this, I'd like to cite citation 327 of Beauchesne, which says that: "The Speaker or the Chairman of a committee of the whole ought not to consider the consequences of the adoption or rejection of a motion or an amendment, nor is it their concern whether ministers of the crown or private members are proceeding fast enough with their bills or motions. All the Speaker has to do is to see that the rules of procedure are" followed. That means that the member for Dufferin-Peel's contention that you should look at the time that it has taken and the time that it will take is totally irrelevant and not germane to the point in question.

I'd like to deal with the notion of parliamentary privilege. Beauchesne defines "parliamentary privilege" as "the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals." That paragraph then goes on to say that the privileges of Parliament, "are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority or dignity." Then Beauchesne states, and this is the part that I would underline: "The most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them."

The standing orders should be seen as a manifestation of the members' privileges, and therefore may not be abrogated from without the unanimous consent of members of this House. The government today is arguing that this is precisely what you should do, that you should abrogate from the standing orders that this House has decided upon over many, many decades without going through the process of unanimous consent. I submit to you that you cannot do that. If you're going to change the procedures that are set out in the standing orders, it can only be done by unanimous consent.

The member for Dufferin-Peel refers to rule 76(5) of the standing orders of the House of Commons. That section states, "The Speaker shall have the power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage." Speaker, that section has no application, no relevance to our Legislature. It is a standing order of the House of Commons, with no application to ours. Our standing orders are silent. There is no requirement for you to import the standing orders of another Legislature into ours; in fact, there is no precedent for that.

However, even if it does apply, I'd like to distinguish that rule on four grounds and make a couple of comments. The first distinction I would ask you to note is that the rule applies only to the report —

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. We're trying to get the time right here. Continue.

Ms Castrilli: Thank you, Speaker. I thought we were in a time warp for a minute.

As I said, there are at least four grounds upon which you could distinguish that order of the House of Commons, even if it were applicable, which I submit it is not. The first is that the standing order applies only to a bill at the report stage. We are not at the report stage, and if in fact it for some reason the bill were sent to the committee of the whole, even at the House of Commons, rule 76(5) would not apply.

The second distinction I would point out to you is that it is not mandatory under the rule for the Speaker to combine amendments together under rule 76(5). The member for Dufferin-Peel did not cite to you the commentary under rule 76(5), which says: "Section (5) authorizes the Speaker to make decisions concerning whether motions can be considered by the House or not. Those that can may be grouped for debate where one vote will dispense with the grouping or a series of votes, depending on a Chair's decision." Therefore, it's discretionary; it's not mandatory, as the member for Dufferin-Peel would have you believe.

The third ground upon which you can distinguish 76(5) is that the same commentary goes on to say, "The Speaker may consult with members proposing the amendments." Again, a decision would leave it open to the Speaker to consult members. That is not our situation in this case. There is no requirement to consult, but in any event, even if it applied, you would probably exercise your discretion by consulting with the members, and I do not think you would get unanimous consent or a unanimous decision on behalf of the members.

The fourth ground upon which I would distinguish 76(5) is that it is used to group amendments for debate or voting. But the amendments must be interrelated and interdependent. That is, they cannot stand separately; they must depend one on the other. I suggest to you that each one of the amendments that we're talking about does stand on its own, does not depend on any other for its existence or its validity.

I'd also make a couple of points with respect to 76(5). The first is that particular standing order was the result of proceedings of a committee which was set by the federal government to study and report on parliamentary proceedings. It was not imposed on the House by the Speaker or by the government of the day. If you're going to make any changes to the standing orders, I would point out that even where 76(5) is in place, it was not done unilaterally by the Speaker, but followed a normal process of the House.

The final comment I would make to you is that each one of these amendments is independent, is separate, should be considered by the House and each member should give it their full attention, and 76(5) does nothing at all to change that contention even it were applicable.

I also, Speaker, would like to talk for a second about our Cafon Court amendment and the fact that we have one amendment that has passed. It is the only one that we have passed unanimously as a House. The member for Dufferin-Peel has argued that this amendment will be excluded, and that is an interesting point, but it does nothing at all for the issue at hand. What Cafon Court does prove, though, is that the votes of the House can be different on each question, and therefore each member must be allowed to express his or her view with respect to that. That, I submit to you, is not only a fact, but it is a matter of privilege, which really brings me to the next point.

Members of this House have a right to examine each of these questions individually; have a right to vote on each question individually. That is a privilege that we have. You, as Speaker, are required to uphold that privilege despite the assertions the member for Dufferin-Peel has made.

Finally, I would comment on rulings that have been made within these proceedings. As you know, because we've argued this case before in other forums, we have no precedents to guide us. But we do have some rulings and some of your own comments. I think while they may not always be precedents, they are germane to this. You have said on more than one occasion that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on. That guided you in making a decision with respect to our Liberal amendments on section 29 and then again on the NDP amendments in section 24(4).

Earlier, the government House leader pointed out that your ruling with respect to section 24(4) was not a precedent. We've all concurred with that. It is clear that's what you meant. But I think in your ruling with respect to section 24(4) you also were very clear about the circumstances which we face. In particular, you were very clear about what happens even under a time allocation motion. I know you remember your own words, but I will enter them for the record in any event. You said:

"The practice of requiring an amendment to be read provides all members present with the opportunity to hear the proposed amendment.... The fundamental parliamentary principle behind this procedure is that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on.

"Under a time allocation motion such as we are currently operating under, the procedure is altered somewhat. The first part of the process is eliminated by virtue of the terms of the motions which state the amendments are deemed to have been moved. This does not, however, mean that the amendment is also deemed to have been read from the chair.... The Chair may only dispense with the reading of the amendment with unanimous consent, even in the face of a time allocation motion such as the one we are operating under."

You went on to say, "I was struck by the principle behind the practice, that is, that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on."

Speaker, I suggest that you made a good ruling. You have in every instance applied the law as it has been placed before you. I think your decision with respect to both grouping and reading should be consistent with some of the authorities that I've cited, although, as I've said, there is nothing that's particularly binding on you, but I think they're persuasive. I'd like to once again underscore that really this is about the privileges of the members of this House, which you must uphold. In the absence of specific statutory and legislative precedent, you must exercise your discretion with caution and in favour of maintaining the privileges of this House.

Ms Lankin: I believe the issue with respect to the applicability or non-applicability of the House of Commons rule with respect to grouping has been adequately explored by the member for Algoma and the member for Downsview. I want to speak specifically to the issue of whether or not the amendments must be read if requested by a member at this point in time. I want to primarily refer to your two rulings during this particular set of proceedings in committee of the whole but also to practice within this Legislative Assembly.

As you know, on Sunday when this question was put to you with respect to the New Democratic Party amendments to section 24, you reviewed the practice and procedures of this Legislative Assembly and found and ruled in fact that the Chair was absolutely correct in his ruling, our practice and procedures require the amendments to be read. You cited the fundamental parliamentary principle behind that being that every member has the right to know what they're voting on.

You did go on to set out the ability of the Speaker to have latitude in exceptional instances and set out that you found the House to be in an exceptional circumstance and therefore ruled that the balance of the NDP amendments to section 24 would be read by referring to street name only. As I have argued to you on another occasion, in your reasons you set out the goals you were trying to accomplish; one was a strong recommendation to the House that in the future we deal with this issue through appropriate rule changes. I suspect that will happen in the future. In closing, you implored the House leaders to begin the process of negotiating an agreement to resolve the impasse.

On Tuesday, the same issue, of whether or not a series of amendments that were similar in nature must be read, was brought to you. At that point in time, in argument before you, I suggested that the exceptional circumstances in which you decided the Speaker could use latitude were ones in which you sought to create an atmosphere and a context to put pressure on all parties in this Legislative Assembly to find a solution to the impasse that we saw before us at that point in time.

I also argued to you that for you to rule again with a ruling of that nature would be to create a precedent that did not exist already within our rules or within our practice, and that it is entirely inappropriate for a Speaker to do that, and also that it would be to distort the balance and the atmosphere that you had sought to create in order to facilitate negotiations. Again, while at some point in time members of this assembly may from time to time wish the Speaker could solve all problems, you cannot. There are certain matters that are matters of differences between the parties of the Legislative Assembly, and if there is to be a resolve, they must find it themselves, and the Speaker cannot step in and do that for us.

In that ruling on Tuesday, I believe you were very clear on this subject. You said, "I want to be very clear to all members of this House: I cannot and will not by virtue of my rulings on this issue in this very difficult circumstance create precedent that will impose a future solution that is more properly decided by this House."

I believe this is important. You went on in your ruling to distinguish the Liberal amendment to section 29 from the NDP amendment to section 24 in its variable nature. I submit to you nothing turns on that differentiation, because you yourself in your ruling say, "In addition, even if I were to entertain the idea of making such rulings, it could not be done with respect to this particular issue." You make it very clear that you are not entertaining the idea of making such rulings. Your finding was that you "cannot and will not by virtue of...rulings on this issue in this very difficult circumstance create precedent that will impose a future solution that is more properly decided by this House."

The government seeks to have you create precedent at this point in time. For what reason? For speed? To expedite matters? That is not your job. The references in Beauchesne make it very clear: The Speaker cannot look to speed, cannot look to accomplish for the government on its House agenda what the government itself has been unable to do.

The member for Dufferin-Peel argues and makes arguments around the imposition on staff of the Legislative Assembly and on political staff and on members of the Legislative Assembly and the requirement that they would be here around the clock. I submit to you that if the members of this Legislative Assembly wanted to come to an agreement on another schedule for voting of eight hours a day, they could do that. We have already created an agreement governing the procedures of this vote, by unanimous consent, which differs from the normal practice, but it has been done by unanimous consent. That door is open to us. That should not be a reason that would compel you to create a precedent.

I say that democracy sometimes is messy, sometimes inconvenient, sometimes lengthy. But it is not for the Speaker of this Legislative Assembly to step in and create solutions that the members of the Legislative Assembly cannot arrive at themselves. It is not the Speaker's job to expedite government business. I believe these arguments I'm about to make, in a sense, are irrelevant to the decision before you, but I would put to you that there is nothing being held up at this point in time. Committees are meeting by mutual consent. Normally, committees would have been suspended. By all-party agreement committees continue to meet. There is not a House calendar for today that has House business before us that is being held up. The inconvenience is one of time. Sometimes democracy is inconvenient. But democracy must be upheld in this Legislature by the members of this Legislative Assembly, and the Speaker cannot rule on the basis of convenience to the government party.

I submit to you on the basis of practice in this Legislature that it would be improper for you to extend your earlier ruling of exceptional circumstances with respect to the amendments to section 24 to this part in the procedure. We are no longer at the point of one having deemed the amendments to be moved and now having to read them on to the record. We are now at the point of dealing with deferred votes. If you review the practice in this assembly, Mr Speaker, you will see that during deferred votes, during the taking of those votes, it is practice to make an adequate identification of the amendment before the Legislative Assembly and to proceed with the votes. It is also clear that it is practice that if at any time any member of this assembly asks that the motion be read in full, then it is read in full. It is different than the stage at which you ruled earlier, which is that they must be read into the agenda. It is now at a point where it must be identified for the purposes of voting, and if any member requests that it be read, it must be read.

I argue, I submit to you that you cannot extend the ruling from earlier to this, and for you to rule in a similar vein at this point in time with respect to a different part of the process that we are in in this committee of the whole would be to create a precedent, which you yourself have said — and it can be no stronger said: "I cannot and will not by virtue of my rulings...create precedent that...impose a future solution that is more properly decided by this House."

I believe that this House will in fact find solutions to these issues. I believe that you will see changes to the rules come forward that will deal with a myriad of issues. But it is not for the Speaker at this point in time to impose those solutions.

Hon David Johnson: The member for Dufferin-Peel has spoken very well in terms of the issue of grouping, and I don't purport to get into that, and I thank him for his comments, if I'm able to do that.

The member for Beaches-Woodbine uses the word "inconvenient," uses the words "messy and time-consuming." There are other words that could be used, such as "stalling" and "delaying" and "wasting of time and taxpayers' dollars."

We have here the prospect, and I guess we have to consider it, of a very legitimate legislative process, one that has been in place for many, many years, the committee of the whole process, which has essentially, through this approach that has been taken, been rendered unworkable by the tactics employed, not only in terms of Bill 103 but apparently, according to reports of amendments being filed, Bill 104 as well.

Mr Speaker, in your ruling earlier on this same day, I guess, since we're still on Wednesday, April 2, you indicated that there is a fundamental parliamentary principle behind this procedure in that every member has a right to know what he or she is voting on. The fact is that we have now read, in the case of clause 24, some several thousand amendments in their completeness and stacked some 8,000 or thereabouts of these particular amendments. The members of this House have had the ability and have had the presence to be part of that process, every member of this House, to hear those several thousand being read, to witness those 8,000 being stacked. I would think a reasonable test would be, particularly in that case, that every member indeed has had the right and has exercised the right and certainly knows what he or she is voting for.

In addition, Mr Speaker, it would be our contention that we would ask that you consider not only section 24, but consider an extension of your thinking, in terms of the thinking that went into your ruling on section 24, and bear in mind that in the case of the amendments dealing with the heritage streets, that we have now had the ability to hear some 2,000 of those amendments, not only being stacked, Mr Speaker, but being read word for word in every detail. So again, I would submit to you that the members of this House have had every opportunity to hear those amendments, to understand those amendments and I think a reasonable test would be that in fact they have exercised that opportunity, that they certainly would understand those amendments. Similarly with the dates: some 800 dates being read in their fullness, being stacked, and the members have had that opportunity to fully understand.

In your speaking you also referenced the committee of the whole procedure for the Social Contract Act of 1993, which reminded me, in looking at that process, Mr Speaker, that during the equivalent voting period that we are now embarking upon here today that in fact there was no reading of the amendments during this equivalent voting period during the Social Contract Act. I well recall at that point, Mr Speaker, being new in my career, coming from the municipal scene, that I was taken by the huge number of amendments during that social contract debate. I believe we had some 200 or thereabouts, and today we face 12,000 amendments. So it's interesting to see the parallel there.

Mr Speaker, you also have gone on to say: "I believe the modern definition of 'Speaker' requires that decisions are taken which are also in the best interests of the institution of Parliament." Very wise advice, I must say. "On occasion, in particular when faced with extraordinary circumstances, Speakers may have to intervene in a way which seeks to enable the parliamentary process to accomplish the business at hand." I think those are key words and ones that I believe are supported by all members of this House, no matter what party they come from, that indeed we need to get on with the business at hand.

You went on to reference Speaker Sauvé. You went on to reference Speaker Warner, where Speaker Warner in 1991 indicated that the Speaker does have a latitude to act in exceptional instances. In your ruling, Mr Speaker, I believe, and I don't wish to put words in your mouth, but surely you would have taken into account the fact of 12,000 amendments; Social Contract Act, some 200 or thereabouts, deemed at that time to be an enormously large number of amendments. Here we are facing 12,000, surely exceptional instances.

Further, you indicated that it was an exceptional circumstance, that the committee of the whole was dealing with an extraordinary number of amendments, a substantial number being identically worded, with the exception in the case of section 24 of the street names.

You went on to recommend a process whereby the sheet minus the street would be made available to the members of the House and that the street name would be read. I would submit to you, Mr Speaker, that that was a wise decision. I would submit to you that that decision is still in force at this particular point. Perhaps you might even deem that no further ruling is required. I don't know. I leave that to your discretion. I would submit that this is still the same committee of the whole, the same process. The ruling still applies. You may wish to reconfirm. Certainly they are still the same circumstances.

Mr Speaker, you have indicated several other recommendations. I won't dwell on them. Suffice to say we have pursued those recommendations, or will pursue them, in terms of future changes to the rules, in terms of attempting to negotiate a process.

I would, in summation, Mr Speaker, indicate that it is certainly our belief that your ruling, in particular on section 24, should be reconfirmed. The same circumstances exist. I would ask you to consider extending that ruling, now that we have had the opportunity to hear all of the amendments being read with regard to the heritage streets. Consider allowing the Chair to simply read those streets or, if you wish, the street and the municipality. Mr Speaker, I would think you would have the latitude to do that.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and The Islands): One of the points is the House leader talked about section 29, and I assume that we're dealing with all groupings here. Two or three points: Point number one is the fact that the Chair who happened to be in the chair at that time has already made a ruling on this matter, and that ruling was not challenged. It's a challenge made yesterday by the government House leader to the effect that all of the historic designations that were talked about in the 2,000 Liberal amendments should be dealt with at once. The Chair ruled that they should be dealt with on an individual basis and that ruling was not challenged, and I might say that's the only ruling that hasn't been challenged with respect to any of those major rulings that the Chairs have made.

If the House leader wants to talk about certain rulings still standing, I would submit to you that that ruling stands, that presumably, with the government not challenging that decision, they accepted the fact that there was something unique about these amendments and that they were not going to challenge that ruling and bring it to your attention.

Next, with respect to the section 29 amendments, I would submit — and I totally accept the arguments with respect to the NDP amendments as well, but this goes even further than that. Surely to goodness a heritage designation is something very unique to a particular street, to a particular neighbourhood, depending upon age and character of the streets and neighbourhoods involved, and I would submit that we have 2,000 amendments of this nature that were all duly selected for their own individual particular reasons. It may very well be that some members of this House may feel that some of these streets are worthy of designation and others are not, but I'm simply saying to deal with them as a whole would be highly improper, Mr Speaker.

Finally, with respect to the standing orders as they pertain to the federal House, I think it's very interesting to note, if you read the notes with respect to standing order 76(6), that notice has to be given of the kind of amendment that is now requested of groupings. Quite clearly, subsection (5) of that standing order authorizes the Speaker to make decisions concerning whether motions can be considered by the House or not and whether they are to be selected or not. Those that may be grouped for debate, where one vote will dispense with the grouping in a series of votes, depend on the Chair's decision. In making such a decision, the Speaker may consult with the members proposing such amendments concerning the subject and purpose of the amendment.

I assume that no notice has been given by anyone with respect to the motion that has been put forward this morning by the member for Dufferin-Peel. As a matter of fact, the standing order itself talks about notice having to be given of an attempt to do this kind of thing so that the Speaker can then get all the amendments together and in effect negotiate a process whereby they may be grouped. That has not happened in this particular case. So on the basis of no notice having been given to the opposition with respect to this proposal this morning, and on the basis that each heritage street, as contained in the Liberal amendments, stands on its own footing, I would suggest to you with respect to those amendments that the voting be dealt with on a separate and an individual basis.

Mr Tony Silipo (Dovercourt): Mr Speaker, I want to deal with the point we have challenged in the ruling, which applies to the issue of reading or not reading the amendments. To emphasize a couple of things, first of all, the reference the government House leader makes to the social contract legislation: It's important to note that at that time there was no request, when we got to the point of the recorded votes, there was never in any of the proceedings — I have them in front of me — a request by any member of the Legislative Assembly present for any of the amendments to be read. I suggest to you that if there had been, then they would have been read, but there was none from any of the members of the opposition or the government.

In fact there was also, it's interesting to note, the traditional and usual process followed which had a standing vote taken on each amendment, which of course, here, we have agreed to deal with otherwise by unanimous agreement, that, just to make the point, you can only deviate from the accepted practice by agreement or by direction of the House. That doesn't exist here and it would be I think stretching the rules, even as you have applied them with your ruling, to at this point in the process change the process from the traditional practice which allows members to ask for individual amendments to be read, for you to rule that they should not be read.

When you made the exceptional ruling that you did, we were in a particular part of the process, the first stage of the process, but we had gone through some 2,000 amendments of a similar nature at that point. I suggest to you that we are nowhere near that situation at this point. Certainly I can tell you that it is our intention to exercise the right that we have to have the amendments read, subject of course to whatever ruling you come to, but to do that in a way that respects the traditions of the House and respects the fact that we have gone through a number of hours of having the amendments read. I think it's important that that sense of balance also be kept and that you, in making your ruling, underline that in fact while this is still the committee of the whole process, this is a separate piece of the process and that the recording of votes is an all-important process.

For all that we know, Speaker, for all that I know and all that you know, as unlikely as it may seem, there may indeed be members of this assembly who were not here for any portions. It's true that there were people who were not here for all of the portions of the previous part of the committee of the whole, but there may indeed be members who were not here for any of it. I don't know for a fact whether that's true or not, but the important principle that, at this particular point of recording of the votes, that established practice of having the amendments read if requested — and I underline that, Speaker: if requested — I think is something that should not be done away with. It certainly should not be done away with on a request from the government at the beginning of this process and should only be considered, if ever, if a situation arises similar to the one that you found yourself in when in fact you made the extraordinary ruling that you did, and the ruling that you yourself said was not to create precedent.

The Speaker: I will not cut off anyone who wants to make a point of order — I've heard a considerable amount of information — but if you do, I would appreciate it if you'd be succinct and to the point. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Hon David H. Tsubouchi (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr Speaker, I will be very brief. I submit to you that, further to the House leader's comments, we are still in the same process. If we are not in the same process, it would certainly lead to certain questions which the Speaker must decide, such as, is there a time limitation with respect to a Speaker's ruling within the same process? If there is such a time limitation, upon which basis do you divide a process up? How do you do this?

I guess my only point I want to make here is that no precedent would be created in this particular instance, because we are still in the same process, Mr Speaker, and with due respect, I suggest that your original ruling is still applicable and still in effect.

Mr Bradley: Mr Speaker, be quite straightforward on this and deal in a very practical sense with the matters before us. First of all, I think it is very clear that there is no rule of this House which permits a Speaker under rules of this House to be able to group amendments. I've looked in the rules of procedure and I have not found that. If we're going to base it on a rule of this House, that rule does not exist; it exists only in the House of Commons, I think it's 76(5), in the House of Commons. While the Speaker of the House of Commons then may rule that amendments may be grouped for voting purposes, such a procedure would require the approval of all members of the House who are in attendance in this particular House, and that approval has not been forthcoming to this point in time. So except by unanimous consent, amendments must be placed, in the view of the opposition, individually.

One cannot prejudge how individual members are going to be voting on individual amendments. One may have a guess as to how that might be, and that seems to be the point that the government is making, they have what they would call a good guess, but one cannot prejudge that and therefore it would our contention that grouping would be inappropriate.

A voice vote also cannot conclusively determine how all members of the House are going to vote. When we're in voice vote stage, one cannot really tell where the nays and yeas are coming from. One can guess, one can have a good guess at that, but one cannot conclusively determine that.

Dealing with the matter of reading each amendment in its entirety again, it is essential and necessary that members hear the entire amendment that is placed, if there is a request to do so by any members of this House. It has been appropriately pointed out, that doesn't necessarily automatically happen. In the voting procedure which we are about to enter, for instance, one may believe that on every occasion it is going to be requested that the amendment be read in its entirety. That is prejudging a circumstance that may or may not arise in the future.

It is the interpretation of the opposition members that your ruling permitting the reading of the abbreviated form of the NDP amendments by referring only to the street name applied only to those amendments from the point beyond your ruling and to the completion of that during the voice vote stage of the committee of the whole. We have now reached a new stage. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations made reference to this. In my view, we have reached a new stage as we come to the actual individual voting, the standing vote, as we used to refer to it.

On that basis, I would say that the government contentions on both of these issues should in fact be rejected.

The Speaker: I appreciate the input from all members. I'm going to take a 30-minute recess to consider their arguments.

Also, according to the rules, we have to close and lock the lobby doors during this period. Unless I hear a dissenting voice, considering that the numbers have been logged, as I understand, I'll agree to open the lobby doors during the recess period.

Mr Wildman: Could I ask for clarification on that? It's my understanding that if the lobby doors are open and people can have egress, it's understood they are coming back in order to maintain the numbers.

Ms Lankin: You just mean these doors.

The Speaker: I just mean these doors. I should have been a little clearer. Just these doors; that gets you into the lobby and access to those phones.

It will be a 30-minute recess.

The House recessed from 0949 to 1033.

The Speaker: I'd like to thank the various members for their submissions. Let me deal first with the issue of grouping of the amendments. The situation before me is as follows: The committee of the whole House has been giving clause-by-clause consideration to Bill 103 pursuant to the time allocation order. The votes on the clauses and amendments have been stacked pursuant to that order, and the committee is set to proceed with the actual vote. The Chair of the committee of the whole House decided that he could not group the amendments for voting purposes without unanimous consent. The voting process would be shortened considerably if the Chair decided to group the amendments or if the committee could somehow agree to group the amendments.

Since there is no unanimous consent to group the amendments, the issue before me is whether the Chair has the authority or jurisdiction to group amendments to Bill 103 for voting purposes in the absence of unanimous consent.

In jurisdictions like the House of Commons at Westminster, the Canadian House of Commons and Quebec's National Assembly, the Speaker or Chair, as the case may be, has the authority to select amendments that will be considered and to, in effect, determine which amendments are voted on. However, that authority is spelled out in the standing orders of those jurisdictions. There is no such authority in the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and so the practice in those jurisdictions that do have such rules cannot, as I indicated in a ruling earlier in the sessional day, bear on how I rule on this issue.

This does not put an end to the matter. The rules — our standing orders — form only one source of procedure that is followed in this assembly. The practice of this House and its committees has long been an important source of parliamentary procedure, and so I have reviewed our practice to determine whether the Chair has the authority to group amendments for voting purposes in circumstances where there is no unanimous consent.

In this regard, I refer members to a situation that faced the First Deputy Chair of the committee of the whole House in the 35th Parliament. On that occasion, Bill 91, An Act respecting Labour Relations in the Agricultural Industry, was being given clause-by-clause consideration. It should be noted that the bill was under time allocation and that the time allocation order was worded like the time allocation order for Bill 103. At about the same point in time on that bill as the committee of the whole House is now on Bill 103, the government House leader of the day stood in his place and addressed the following remarks to the Chair:

"We're at a stage where all the amendments that have been moved are deemed to have been divided on and stacked for a vote, and we've had one section of the bill divided on and stacked for a vote. In the amendments, there are two packages. There is a package of government amendments and a package of amendments by the Conservative Party.

"I would seek the consent of the House to deal with those amendments in three packages: that we deal with the section which has been divided on as one item, that we deal with the government package of amendments as a second item, and that we deal with the Conservative package of amendments as a third item."

Immediately after the government House leader of the day made these remarks, the Chair asked whether there was agreement to the proposition put forward by the government House leader. The member for Mississauga South indicated there was no agreement, and so the Chair had to proceed with the usual committee of the whole voting process on the bill. I note that on many of the subsequent votes on the individual amendments, there were no divisions; instead, the House agreed to the "same vote" as the vote on the proceeding amendment. However, on other amendments, divisions were taken at the insistence of the member for Mississauga South, the member for Wellington and the member for Grey-Owen Sound. Still later in the committee of the whole voting process on that bill, the Chair found that there was unanimous consent for the original proposal of the government House leader, and the bill was eventually reported to the House later that same day. The events of the day can be found at pages 7339 to 7354 of Hansard.

I find that the voting process on that day is reflective of our practice on how votes are to be conducted in the committee of the whole. Since the early 1970s, Speakers Lamoureux, Sauvé and Fraser in the House of Commons and Speaker Warner in this House, when faced with requests from one side of the House or the other to effect drastic measures to resolve impasses arrived at in the House, have said that situations might arise in the future where Speakers would have to step in to impose a solution when negotiations between the parties have not been successful and the House has been effectively obstructed in its progress.

In my opinion, the situation facing us does not constitute one where I would be forced to impose a solution. If this House wants to effect a new procedure, it should, and it should do so in the usual manner. We are in a process where we are moving at a painfully slow pace but we are proceeding.

With respect to the ruling of Speaker Fraser in 1987, I want to say this: Speaker Fraser went only so far as to allow the government to move a motion of a kind that up to that point had never been moved. In that case, Speaker Fraser was not imposing a new or imported rule on the House. He was simply finding that there was nothing in their rules which would disallow such a motion. I repeat: He was not imposing a procedure that did not exist.

I am upholding the ruling of the Chair that unanimous consent is required for the Chair to group the amendments for voting purposes.

Let me now turn to the issue of the reading of the amendments. The member for Algoma (Mr Wildman) has appealed the ruling of the Chair of the committee of the whole House that for the purpose of the actual voting on the so-called street amendments, the Chair will read not the entire amendment but only the name of the street associated with each amendment.

Let me begin this branch of my ruling by saying that members will recall that earlier this sessional day I had ruled that, with respect to the lead-up to the voting process on the street amendments, it was sufficient that the Chair read the names of the streets identified in each amendment as opposed to the entire amendment.

Members will also recall that, later in that sessional day, I ruled that the so-called heritage amendments had to be read in their entirety, and that the circumstances associated with those amendments were different than the circumstances associated with the earlier street amendments.

In the situation I am now being asked to rule on, the committee of the whole House is about to enter into the voting process proper; that is, members are now going to vote on each of the stacked votes.

I must say that I am still of the view that my ruling with respect to the street amendments cannot constitute a precedent in the disposition of this appeal. However, that ruling was intended to cover the committee of the whole stage consideration of these amendments.

The principles referred to in that ruling are intact. I am referring to the related principles that members are entitled to know what they are voting on, and that it is important to prevent errors in the voting process. I am of the view that it must surely be the case that, by now, members are familiar enough with the street amendments that they know what they are voting on, and that errors can be prevented. Therefore, I am ruling that, with respect to the street amendments, the Chair can simply read the street names.

I want to emphasize, however, that while the reasoning and the end result of this ruling and of my previous ruling on the street amendments may be similar, this ruling is not based on nor is it strengthened by the existence of that earlier ruling. I want to reiterate the point that I would have come to the same view on the current appeal if I would have ruled differently or not ruled at all on that earlier occasion. That earlier ruling should not be construed as a precedent, and the same goes for the ruling today.

In short, I am upholding the ruling of the Chair of the committee of the House that only the street names have to be read for all of the 8,000 or so street amendments.

Finally, as Speaker I must strike a very delicate balance. I understand in situations such as this that emotions run very high and tempers become short. I believe that over the past eight days I have rendered fair and impartial decisions, cognizant of the length of time and the onerous demands placed on all of us. But the fundamental underlying foundation of my decisions must be true to parliamentary democratic traditions because these decisions affect not only us, but the decisions taken by the Speaker also affect parliamentary institutions for generations to come.

I appreciate your attentiveness, and I have ruled.
House in committee of the whole.

Mr Wildman: On a point of order, Mr Chairman: I've been listening to this process and it concerns me that it seems incomplete. The reason it seems incomplete is you are not saying, "NDP amendment," or "NDP motion to section 24(4)" and the street name, so I'm requesting you to do that.

The Acting Chair: As I understood the Speaker's ruling, he said that all that had to be read was the street name, so that is what I will continue to read, sir.

Mr Wildman: With regret, Chair, I will have to challenge that ruling.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Call up the Speaker.

The committee rose and requested a ruling of the Speaker.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Acting Chair: Mr Speaker, we'd been going through the NDP amendments to section 24(4) of the bill, a series of street names. We had done about 800 or 900 of those, just reading the street name, as I understood your instructions were. The member for Algoma asked if I would then begin to read, "NDP amendment, section so-and-so," and the street name. I said I was following what I thought were your instructions, that is, to read just the street name and, based on that decision of mine, he challenged that and asked that you come in and rule.

The Speaker: Thank you. Member for Algoma?

Mr Wildman: Mr Speaker, I suppose this may seem like a minor matter but it does deal with decorum of the House, the traditions of the House and the proper operation of the committee. As I understand your ruling, which I respect, the amendments did not need to be individually read but could be identified by enumerating the street name. We accept that, but it is important for all of us to know what we are doing and it is important for anyone, in my view, who is viewing this on television to know what we are doing. Simply to read a long list of street names doesn't do that.

What we are doing is dealing with New Democratic Party amendments — I wouldn't require it to be read as "New Democratic Party," but that would be proper — to section 24(4) of the bill. All I'm suggesting is, after having listened to the Acting Chair go through this for a number of amendments, that it must be incomprehensible to most and simply to identify what in fact we are doing. We are dealing with NDP motions that amend subsection 24(4) of Bill 103, and I'm simply asking that that be done properly, while using the street name to identify the individual amendment that is being dealt with.

The Speaker: Minister of Energy and Environment?

Hon Mr Sterling: Thanks very much, although it's less energy, more environment. Mr Speaker, I just want to make two brief points. (1) This has already been accepted by the Legislature in terms of usage as we have already gone through 800 or 900 of these amendments, and it's kind of late in the game to start changing the rules. (2) I believe that the whole purpose of identifying the amendment by the street, as you have indicated, and the naming of the street is so that each and every member of this Legislature will understand what amendment we're on so that they can choose which way they would vote.

I might add that in the previous procedure which we had the section was named, the New Democratic Party was identified as the sponsor and therefore each and every member knows of that connection.

I guess lastly, Mr Speaker, there are 8,000 amendments. I don't think anything is gained in terms of the process by repeating the same sentence 8,000 times.

Mr Wildman: Very briefly, I think the minister, in his intervention, has underlined the point I am making. It is not only important for us to know the street name, it is important for us to know the section of the bill that the amendment is dealing with.

The Speaker: I thank the members for their submissions. I also thank the fact that not once did I hear Beauchesne or Erskine May and that makes me happy. First, let me say the amendments were announced at the beginning of this and they were the NDP amendments, plural. There's a timeliness, of course, to bringing up a point of order. We're somewhere between 800 or 900, I forget the exact number, through, and that in fact is a timely argument.

But having said that, to the member for Algoma, I will say that in my ruling it was very clear, and I read it: "Therefore I am ruling that with respect to the street amendments the Chair can simply read the street names." That is about as clear as I can make it. Having said that, if there is some concern, I would ask these two simple processes be followed for the future.

I will ensure that as quickly as possible a generic amendment be provided at the table, as many copies as needed. If you need it, you can come down and get it. Second, at the beginning of every four-hour voting period cycle, I will ask the Chair to announce to the members who come in what amendment we are actually speaking to and they can read the amendment at that time as well, one time and one time only. Thank you.
